OH, SEE!
Oh, what is all this Mon-kay bus-i-nese? 'Tis but the wreck of a ship-load of act-ors and act-or-ines. Their trunks were washed up on Af-ri-ca's lone-ly coast, and the an-i-mals donned the cos-tumes. Then they felt like act-ors and gave a show. Such is life! The Ti-ger put on a Ro-man sol-dier un-i-form and re-cit-ed "I come to bu ry Cae-sar!" A-las, how-ev-er, one swal-low does not quench a thirst. One ride in an au-to-mo bile does not make a man a mil-ion-aire!

$100 Every Week for the Best Baby

THE lucky prize winner this week is again a girl—little four-year-old Ella Mae Flynn, of No. 271 Medford street, Somerville, Mass. The $100 prize has been sent to the child's proud mamma, Mrs Georgia C. Flynn, to start a bank account for little Miss Ella.

One hundred dollars will be awarded by this newspaper each week to the child whose photograph shows the greatest beauty, intelligence, health and graceful pose.

Have you a baby of your own, or do you know of some little one who should be entered in this unique competition? Select the most pleasing photograph you have of the child, write baby's full name and age on the back, together with the parents' name and address, and mail the picture to

BABY PRIZE EDITOR,
Care of This Newspaper.

Children over six years of age are not eligible. It must be understood that photographs are not to be returned.

THERE is nothing of greater interest to the average feminine heart than a wedding. October is running Juno a close second in the number of weddings, and my bank account is showing rather alarming gaps in consequence. I suppose Cholly and I are paying back all the really lovely presents we got at our wedding.

One of the prettiest bridesmaid's gowns I have seen this Autumn was worn by Miss Gertrude Sheldon at a fashionable country wedding.

This bridesmaid's gown was all white—a soft, creamy white chiffon cloth, trimmed with cream-colored satin and enriched with lace.

The dress was apparently all cut in one and was draped in soft folds about the hips. The skirt was very long and sweeping and had the fashionable wide tucks just above the hem.

A yoke of finely tucked chiffon was enclosed by a lower yoke of creamy lace. The sleeves were cut kimono style, in one with the rest of the waist, and were edged with satin folds. The undersleeves were of chiffon cloth.

I met most Mrs. Alfred Wagstaff, Sr., at a wedding, and I never saw her look better. She wore all black, with only a wonderful string of diamonds sup porting a diamond heart to relieve the somberness.

This gown also was composed of chiffon cloth, satin and lace. It was made on a princesse model, with a good deal of fine tucking outlining the waist line. But on it the lace was used a good deal more generously than on Miss Sheldon's bridesmaid gown.

Mrs. Wagstaff wore with this an all-black hat of Neapolitan straw. It was a medium size, irregularly edged mushroom. Kind of parasol plumes waved at each side. They were caught at the other side with a clasp of black tulle.

Since we're discussing wedding clothes, I think I must tell you of a really "darky" little frock I saw Martha McCue, wear at a wedding lately.

It was pale blue silk, very soft and clinging, was used for this little gown. There was a yoke of Valenciennes lace and insertion and ran in slanting line from shoulder to waist. The sleeves were charming. A puff of silk and below it ferlls of Valenciennes lace caught with little wreaths of pink rosebuds.

Easy to Cut and Make at Home.

THE combination of velvet and cloth is a feature of the season. Many velvet coats are shown with cloth skirts, the skirts trimmed with velvet to match the coat. For coats are also shown, with cloth skirts trimmed with fur to match.

There is simply no limit to the beautiful new materials in use for the separate waist. Among the newest are the exclusive chiffons. These waists are usually trimmed with a solid color harmonizing with the cloth with which they are worn.

The use of lace as a trimming on these sheer waists is a novelty that is meeting with much favor. Another ornament of silk in combination with braid are also used.

The kimono effects and mandarin sleeves are prominent in the children's garments. They certainly add a touch of newness that is very welcome.

The dressy little child's frock in cream white cloths here illustrated shows the Mandarin sleeve in quaint and charming effect. The mode is eminently simple and girlish, and very becoming to the childish figure.

Why Many Charming Girls Don't Marry

Miss Giulia Morosini

Miss Norma Munro

Here's a Scientific Explanation of This Strange Fact.

"I WONDER why that charming girl does not marry?" How often do we hear the question asked! But no one could ever have solved, or even fathomed the mystery in at least eighteen cases.

A glance at our best friend's ear will tell us in ten cases out of twenty why she is left on the shelf while his kind smile, in revealing his teeth, reveals also the favorite harbors of his forebears, and consequently his own more or less unmistakable chances of becoming either a bachelor or an imbecile.

If any further light be required, his feet from below might show how dangerous predilection his house keeps on the counting of a "k," the dot on an "i," and beyond those details there are always the Rosicrucian rays to lay bare the very marrow of his bones.

For all that, however, it is inconceivable that more light is wanted on what may be called lovely woman's blunt white, vile, ruthless. You only see exactly the same two blocks of monumental buildings in any social which, like the backward curves, are for below zero?

Now, the anarchist would flare up this that morning has not wholly gone out of fever. Modern life is a hard, high-pressure affair, the weaker go to the wall, and as a result we said that the cloth of gold is not to be had for forming their fairy fellows. That, then, is the secret of this change in society?

It is a case for the experts.

Only one woman has succeeded in piercing this—perhaps the last veil of mystery—and that one belongs to Dr. Barnbur. After years of investigation the doctor, who practises in Paris as a specialist for nervous diseases, has obtained some very remarkable plates, which are said to reveal the presence of an unsuspected germ.

In no two subjects is the germ exactly similar. In some it can be easily discovered; in others, it is so highly developed and its radio-activity is so great that the whole sphere surrounding the subject is distorted to a great distance. This area is wrapped round the subject, and they radiate along well-defined tracks like spokes.

In one of his books that celebrated American writer, Mr. Henry James, in his delicate fashion, has described a young girl who appeared one day at the luncheon table of a Paris pension. He says she was the type of girl who might be placed one morning on a desert island, thousands of miles from anywhere, and before many hours had passed an eligible young man would be washed up by the tide in her side. You cannot explain these things save the author, but they are incontrovertible facts.

We all know that kind of girl. Inconsiderable male satellites appear all along her orbit, drawn thither by some potent but unseen force. Others, with all possible assiduity, go unnoticed, and all the while recalls to grave without any apparent reason found. Dr. Barbour's camera explains these agreeings by making visible what was before, and even by showing how it operates.

The doctor's experiments have convinced him that the most feminine and attractive women have the strongest aura. In fact, that ineffable thing which we call charm is proportionate to this aura.

In some subjects the camera reveals exceedingly troublous conditions: a state of intense radio-activity is apparent, the waves of atoms pouring eagerly toward some object. In others, the aura is apparently stable, scarcely any movement being detected.

In abnormal subjects, such as hysterical, neurasthenic or insane persons, the atoms take on extraordinary forms and dispositions, and we have a wild incoherence in motion.

The aura and its radio-activity, apparently independent of the sensory organs, and the power of attraction possessed by certain does not end with their aura. There is a further and voluntary power dependent on the will and mind. Dr. Barnbur has secured a photograph of this, which may be called the mechanical idea.

The sentimental idea has far more definiteness of outline than the aura, but is not equally effectual, and could probably only be communicated at close range.

Ladies of Troy must have possessed such an aura, and Cleopatra, Diane de Poitiers, Mary Stuart, Pauline Bonaparte and the other great exponents of history. You cannot visualize these restless and disturbing creatures in the peaceful seclusion of a ladies' club. Any one of them would probably have been sufficient to influence a whole quarter, if not a whole modern city, and we might have had new Iliads to write.

They led a simple life, these bewitching Ladies of old times, and had nothing else to do but develop an aura. To-day we have all the privileges upon our minds, and we labor strenuously for various distracting causes.

It is quite possible that many an otherwise promising aura has perished of inanition during the last decade in consequence.

"Oh, my darling Polly Pinky! Oh, my lovely Pinky Poll!
Somehow I haven't really grown up yet;
You won't tell on me, will you, if I take my biggest doll
And give her just a tiny little pet?

"I'll hold her just a minute, while I smooth her golden hair,
And then I'll lay her back upon the shelf;
And I'll give one tiny pat to dear, old chubby Teddy Bear,
I know you'd like to cuddle him, yourself!

"Now, I'll go. But, Polly Pinky, isn't it an awful bore
To have to meet my mother's guests at tea?
Old Mr. Burt is coming, and he'll stay an hour or more,
And his talk is just as prosy as can be!"

"I'll be good," thought Saucy Sissy; "Oh, but will he ever go?
I'm trying hard to get my answers right;"
Then the busy little dimple in her cheek began to show,
And her smile was mischievous, but quite polite.

"Yes, yes," the old man rambled on; "yes, yes, my dear, I'm sure
You're everything a young miss ought to be;
Deferential and respectful, modest, gentle and demure,
And your mother is quite proud of you, I see.

"And, I trust, my child, you'll always be well-mannered and well-bred:
And never make remarks ill-timed or pert."
With her most engaging manner, Saucy Sissy sweetly said:
"Was your grandmother a monkey, Mr. Burt?"

Lots of Money—But no Fun

HAND PAINTED SKETCH BY

Striking Illustrations of the Great Truth that Wealth Does Not Bring Happiness.

"If I were rich; if I only had plenty of money!" is the longing sigh of thoughtless women who are discontented and unhappy—but great wealth does not bring contentment nor happiness. There are, perhaps, no better living examples of the great moral truth that riches do not mean happiness than the three young women whose portraits are printed on this page. "Lots of money; yes, but no fun!" is the confession of all three.

All these young women are very wealthy, each one of them possessing more than ten millions in her own right. All are young. All are beautiful. Two of them are married, and the other has had a score of opportunities to marry, but they did not please her. Two of them have beautiful children. All have town houses and country houses, yachts, automobiles, boxes at the opera and great collections of magnificent jewels, to which they are constantly adding.

In spite of their great possessions, every one of these three rich and beautiful young women is miserable. All of them have "lots of money—but no fun." Each is driven by a restless, remorseless spirit in search of the happiness she has not found. In a clean, well-kept little flat is a tenement of our great cities, many a laborer's wife, struggling hard to make both ends meet, is far happier than these restless rich women.

Mrs. "Joe" Lewis, wife of the African "Diamond King," whose fortune is accounted seventy millions, coming home from a brilliant reception at the house of a duchess in Mayfair, looked so dissatisfied, so frankly wretched, that her husband, who had been the partner of Alfred Beit, leaned forward, took her hand and said.

"Dear, you have a larger fortune than all the titled women you met to-night. You have finer jewels than they and ten times as many. You are younger and more beautiful than any of them. You have Dorothy, our lovely little daughter. You have our house in town, our place on the Thames."

Here Mrs. Lewis pressed her pretty, discontented face against her husband's shoulder and burst into tears.

"I would give them all up for a little dressing room in a dingy theatre," she sobbed.

"There! There! You shall keep them all and have the dressing room too," returned her husband, comfortingly. "If you need to go back upon the stage to be happy you shall go."

Mrs. Lewis, who had once been known on the American stage as Fannie Ward, went back to the boards in her pursuit of happiness. Even there, where she had dreamed it dwelt, it evaded her. The London critics assailed her immature art. They hinted that she was pretty but stupid, and one said that she was as "expressionless as any other clothes rack." They condemned her acting in one acrid line, while the fashion experts applauded her jeweller and her modiste and her dressmaker in a hundred fervid lines.

Mrs. "Diamond Joe" Lewis talked back in the newspapers, and all London laughed. She continued to secure engagements, and the critics dared to say that in each instance her husband had an interest in the financial management of the theatre

IS THE DIRECTOIRE STICK COMING?

The Directoire Stick Is a Natural Accompaniment to the Picturesque Directoire Costume of Trailing Skirts, Big Hats and Lace Ruffles.

WOULDN'T you raise your eyebrows likewise, as she then was, used to be just a trifle if you saw the women known by the "fashionistas" of her walking of Fifth Avenue sauntering along, stick? Perhaps she acquired the habit carrying tall, slim sticks, a la Marquise, when as bridesmaid at Elsie Whelen's wedding she insisted on all the other bridesmaids keeping step to the top of her voice and tall Directoire canes. She really made quite a commotion at the rehearsals by her insistence on this.

If you see this—and it's quite possible you may before long—don't jump to the conclusion that they have escaped from the chorus of a popular comic opera. Or that they are athletic lots of femininity equipped with Alpine stocks and a wild ambition to mountain-climb the canyon walls of downtown Manhattan. No; these women are merely trying to carry out in accurate detail the vogue for Costumes Directoire.

Walking sticks of various kinds have long been carried by women in England and in France. They are nearly always stout canes of ash or rosewood, imitating closely those used by husband or brother—just the average walking stick length.

When Queen Alexandra, then the Princess of Wales, was obliged by an accident to her knee, to walk with a stick, her loyal feminine subjects immediately adopted both the limp and the cane. The limp didn't stay long in fashion—it was a trifle fatiguing and quite difficult to do gracefully—but the walking stick for women became a permanent British institution. Of course, you don't see it in town, but no country walk undertaken by an English woman is quite complete without one.

In France, too, the women carry sticks when walking in the country. But they are not great pedestrians, as are their neighbors across the Channel.

There has been an effort made from time to time to induce American women to carry walking sticks—possibly as an inducement to greater outdoor exercise. But while some women did adopt the fashion, they were few and far between.

The Baroness Hengelmuller always carried one when in the country. William K. Vanderbilt's sister, Mrs. William Douglas Sloane, looks most picturesque and dignified when you meet her on the hills at Lenox walking with her tall stick. Alice Insistence on this.

It was a fad for a time in England for bridesmaids to complete their picturesque effect of trailing skirts and big, beplumed hats by carrying tall Directoire sticks decorated with flowers and tied with satin ribbons.

But the canes which promise to come before long as a natural accompaniment to the Directoire and Empire and Incroyable lines we are adopting in our gowns are substantial, everyday looking affairs. They are not gilded, nor are they flower decked. They even lack a frivolous ribbon to suspend them from the wrist. They have only cords.

They are slim shafts of ebony, black and polished, surmounted by a knob of silver or of gold, plain or chased. The average length for one is about four feet, although, of course, this varies according to the height of the person destined to carry it.

If it really becomes the general fashion to carry these canes—and that has yet to be proved—you can imagine the additions which up-to-date ingenuity will make to an Old World toy.

At a shop where in glass cases repose hundreds of canes—more canes than one ever dreamed of seeing in one's life—they tell me that they already have many orders for these Directoire sticks. In price they range from five dollars for the plain black shaft with a simple silver knob up to twenty-five dollars for one with a gold top.

This at the shop of the cane-makers. But the up-to-date American women lose no chance to lavish expense on their personal belongings. And the fashionable jewelers ably second them.

So you can imagine the joy with which by great ladies in the eighteenth century the worker in gold and precious stones will and even down to the beginning of the nineteenth. It is the kind carried by the Duchess of Marlborough in her portrait at a great reception with her new walk- ing stick. It is usual at such affairs to that "Diamond Joe" was trying to buy his wife the happiness her restless soul craved.

Turning her back upon London she came to America. She joined Kyrl Belcher's company in a weak play called "The Marriage of Reason." Again the critics challenged her right to appear upon the stage. Mrs. Lewis pouted and stayed away from the theatre for two nights. Her absence only aggravated the trouble. A little bored, less Worth nobody studied her part and played it brilliantly at two hours' notice, and the critics cried, "I told you so!" and pointed to models. The play had a brief, inglorious run. Mrs. Lewis took herself and her wardrobe—the wardrobe that caused a sheikh's gown and enough jewels to fill all of the windows and a half dozen show cases in Tiffany's—back to London. She is still, despite the fact that she is one of the richest women in the world, steeped in the misery of discontent and disappointment.

Mrs. A. Hart McKee has a fortune inherited from her first multi-millionaire husband, Hugh Tevis, of California. From her father she will inherit almost as much more. She is young, still less than thirty, and she has been pronounced "the most beautiful woman ever born in Tennessee" and is generally considered one of the most beautiful in the United States. Yet to all the United States it would be hard to find a more unhappy woman than Mrs. Hart McKee.

At the beginning of her social career she became engaged to Gerald Hughes, a young attorney, of Denver, but a few days before the date of their wedding she jilted him openly and cruelly for Hugh Tevis, a multi-millionaire, of California. The Tevises went on an ill-starred wedding journey to the Orient. A month after the wedding the bridegroom died in Japan.

The widow, after brief mourning, attracted the attention of A. Hart McKee, belonging to the coterie of erratic Pitts burg multi-millionaires. She became infatuated with him, and the ink had scarcely dried upon his divorce decree from the widow when he married an astounding series of indignities and revelations before Mrs. Tevis became Mrs. McKee and they made their second excursion into the field of matrimony.

Six months had not passed before there were rumors that the McKees had found marriage to be a succession of troubling, irritating discords. A son was born to them; but parenthood seemed not to weld their interests or end their more or less trivial differences. They drifted further apart. They entertained lavishly, exciting the envy of the old nobility of France and the European ruling millionaire colony from America. Always as the world took of Mrs. A. Hart McKee stood the erratic Infanta Eulalie of Spain. Mrs. McKee made a social sensation in Europe. Gossip gossiped her possible wealth.

Then suddenly, without warning, she left Europe and returned to America. Her husband followed her. Then they separated. Mrs. McKee went to Reno, Nev., and established a residence there

How the "Privateering" Vanderbilts, in a Final Death Grip With Their Ancient Foes in the Philadelphia Set Are Backed by the Harrimans Against the Fishes, Win Over the Carters, Pauls and Drexels and Reach for the Sceptre of Mrs. "Joe" Widener.

Philadelphia, Oct. 25.

WITHIN the innermost confines of American Society the great tug of war is on. Between the Reggie Vanderbilts and all their tribe, and that portion of Philadelphia society which in the past has snubbed them so persistently, there is to be no quarter.

What the field of battle will show when the smoke has cleared away is a speculation which is already sending cold chills down fair backs, causing ominous rumblings in Wall Street. Already grave things seem assured.

Beautiful Mrs. Joseph Widener, who for two years has waved her sceptre over the Philadelphia set at Newport, is to be deposed from her throne.

Mrs. Robert Goelet, who was the very lovely Elsie Whelen, is to be raised to that place.

Not exiled are Mrs. Widener and her court to be—no, no—only depressed to the low place where she and they can still look regretfully at the heights from which they have fallen.

And this—this—is the most wonderful thing of the whole campaign. The Vanderbilts have actually broken into Philadelphia society, and not only broken in but are dragging behind them in their triumph the most exclusive and adamantine, to the outsider, set of all.

How they did it is as wonderful as the act itself, but there they are and the war is on.

Newport will be and indeed is already the prime battlefield of the campaign. New York and Philadelphia will have their skirmishes, dainty, well bred deadly skirmishes that will leave behind them many a tarnished shield and broken bauble.

Back from Europe comes Mrs. John R. Drexel, hurrying to take her part as leader in New York and of the councils of the Vanderbiltians. For the clan of the great Drexels have gone over to the enemy in their entirety, and this, too, has slight, dark, vivacious and beautiful Mary Astor Paul, not yet a debutante, done.

Nay, more, for when Miss Paul comes out in December at a ball which her father is planning to make more wondrous even that the "Four Seasons" ball which introduced his other daughter, now Mrs. Paul Dearie Mills, and which cost him possibly between fifty and seventy-five thousand dollars—he paid $20,000 for flowers alone—the Vanderbilts will be there in all their glory. It will be the first great event in Philadelphia society at which they have appeared by invitation.

To that ball will come, too, lovely Margaretta Drexel, Mary Paul's cousin, fresh from her triumphs in London, and with her her mother, who is equally beautiful and very mighty. Over the lists of those to be asked the Vanderbilt influence will be cast. That is certain.

Will the ejection of the Gaekwar of Baroda and his Maharani be repeated—that coup of Mrs. George Law's of last year, which wafted the "Reggies" well over the Quaker barrier?

If it is repeated, and that is what society is whispering with pneumatory shivers, it will be one of the mightiest blows the feud can see.

There is every probability that it will come to pass, for be it known that this is real war that is on now, with social friendlinesses and thrones at stake, war that will be waged in hoodlum and ball gowns, on horseback and in motor cars and yachts, and in big office buildings and on 'Change. Millions will be thrown in the struggle, and millions will be spent, the stock ticker will record in plain letters but in kindred spirit the fluctuations of the fight, and bull and bear upheavals will mark sides in the waging of the feud, for in America woman rules society and in America woman rules men.

Drawn into it be the feud of the Harrimans and the Fishes, with the Fishes, the Belmonts and the Knickys behind Mrs. Joe Widener, who has behind her, too, the millions of her husband. On the side of the Vanderbilts will be the Harriman forces.

In Philadelphia, to offset the Willie Carters with their records of conquest at the Court of St. James's, and who are with the Vanderbilts, will be Mrs. E. Moore Robinson, with her victories at the courts of Vienna and Berlin, and the Winters and Biddles, all those alive enough to throw themselves into the fight. Beautiful Eleanora Lewis, who is now Mrs. C. Wheaton Vaughan, will be in the lists for the reigning dynasty in New York. The famous Levering Jeffries clan, under the leadership of Mrs. Horace Rosengarten, have enlisted in Philadelphia under the banner of Mrs. "Joe."

Of course, all this is partial, for the lines have not yet been drawn tightly—the episode of Mrs. A. Lanfear Norris, at Newport, last week, when, after having invited twenty guests in honor of Gladys Vanderbilt and her Count she was snubbed by them, proves that. But so terrible a thing shows to what lengths the affair will be carried against the factions and makes more real the rumor of the cruel cudgel to be wielded at the coming out of Miss Paul.

That memory of the Gaekwar of Baroda still rankles in the breasts of Philadelphia society. It would be worth recalling in itself, even if it didn't have dignity as the first open chapter of the feud. It is what has gone down in the annals as the "Mystery of the Six Empty Plates." It, too, has the Parthian tinge, and in it, even as now, the "Reggie" Vanderbilts carried the war into the enemy's own country, routing them with a surprise.

It was last year that the swarthy Gaekwar, wit his wonderful jewels and wonderful Maharani, descended upon Philadelphia. It was horse show time and the Vanderbilts were there, living in happy ostracism at the Bellevue-Stratford, because could afford to wait.

At Newport it was different. When one has really for the last season been a part is in another place one must accept to a of the English court. Miss Drexel has degree the social values of that place. even. It has been whispered, been asked by The social values of the Vanderbilts went at their face value in the pleasure city, It was easy to understand. One wouldn't ask a cannibal chief to dine tete-a-tete at home, but at his home one would gladly dine so with the chief. Only if the chief realizes the reservation he doesn't probably feel nicely about it. So it grew at Newport. Unquestionably, too, there was a strong personal side.

When Mrs. Drexel sailed, and Mrs. Widener took the reins over the Philadelphia set, there were little things that happened. These little things fed more actively in the stately mother, Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel, even. It has been whispered, been asked by the Prince Francis of Teck to be his at their face value in the pleasure city, princess. Miss Paul was made much of by It was easy to understand. One wouldn't the Vanderbilts, and had a perfectly en-snap the Vanderbilt party, there was a pleasant unrest about the grandstand that hadn't been there since it was built. Then there were all sorts of little exclusive affairs and at all of them were the Vander-chanting Summer.

And now for the great surprise to Philadelphia society.

There are horse shows and horse shows in Philadelphia. There is the big one at Wissahickon, to which nearly every one goes, whether they have the key to the holy of holys or not. All the out of town people go there too. It isn't to terribly exclusive affairs of course there are functions and things connected with it that are. Still it's pretty wide open.

But following it in the Fall is the Bryn Mawr shows, which is the most intimate of things. It is to all other horse shows what the Assembly used to be to all other balls in Philadelphia. It is a family party purely where the matrons gather to plan campaigns, the debutantes conquests, and the nearly buds to talk over the future. The horse is very secondary indeed. The presence of an out of towner, unless he or she has been a Philadelphian or connected by marriage, is a phenomenon.

Such is one of the customs and it was in full swing on the second day of the show when, behind, down the strand swaggered a familiar stocky figure in a big yellow rain coat with enormous shoulders and a skirt like the Liberty Bell. Arm in arm with him was a slender chap with little moustaches and a cigarette drooping from one corner of his mouth. With them was a little lady in brown and another with blond curls showing under a modification of a tarpaulin.

"It's the Reggie Vanderbilts," gasped society.

"And with the Willie Carters," came the second strophe.

"And they're in the Paul box," was the final astonished chorus.

They were indeed. There was Mrs. Reggie and Willie Carter and Mrs. Willie Carter all ensconced in that one of the most exclusive of partitions looking comfortably out into the drizzle.

"Buzz, buzz," went the grandstand like a hive of bees, and even the horses seemed to stop to look. People came and went about the box. Some greeted the Carters gladly and the Vanderbilts with courteous chilliness. Some greeted all effusively. But the Vanderbilts and the Carters didn't seem to mind one or the other. They went on joyously. Decidedly, too, the New Yorkers added to the gaiety.

When Miss Paul won a host of blue ribbons the breakdown that she and Reggie gloated on the club house porch in the Philadelphia society would have liked to to every horse show came the Vanderbilts, Summer. Little Miss Paul is athletic, cheers and formed a leading incident for go, more because of the guests than of the and no one cared. The Vanderbilts seemed sparkling over with life, and loves horses, hosts, and not one of their boxes was to care least of all. But it seems that Her very, very dearest friend is her beauti-

Little Miss Paul was at Newport this irrepressible triumph was greeted by Cornelius Vanderbilt, will also wed a title. Decidedly there are tremendous factors in this butterfly war.

What will the lists show in December? If upon them are the names of the Vanderbilts, and Mrs. "Joe" Widener and her chieftainesses do not appear it will be a heavy score for the invaders certainly and a victory that will probably win the fight in Newport next season. If all appear it will mean a deadlock, if the Vanderbilts aren't there it will be a carol of victory for the lovely Mrs. "Joe." It must not be taken for granted, though, log entertained by no one, entertaining no one, and apparently having a glorious time. All Philadelphia society wanted to meet the Gaekwar and his Maharani, but the Gaekwar would not meet a soul. Came floating over from New York the charming Mrs. Law, traveller in India, friend of the Gaekwar and the object of a proposal of marriage by a neighboring rajah immediately rightly cause out of their shells and a dinner was planned.

Mrs. Law had many friends in Philadelphia. But alas, she were more friendly to the Reggies. Reggie looked over her dinner list and commanded. The night of the dinner all society stood on tiptoes, for it was known that six places had been allotted by Mrs. Law to Quakerdom. Society continued to stand on its tiptoes, for those six places only appeared at the table for one course, and they were consistently empty. The Vanderbilts had removed the list.

And the blushing feat went through Philadelphia the next day was like that of wayside desperate.

But it was clever, and it was bold, and there were many who laughed, none, though, so heartily as the Reggie Vanderbilts. It had been done with a dash, with a spice of the privateer that was captivating.

Now, the history of the Great Feud, like all great things, is veiled in legend and mystery. The corrected and annotated version up to date seems to be that at first Philadelphia society wouldn't consider the Vanderbilts. They didn't belong. Their grandfather and grandmother sold things. In fact, Quakerdom didn't think the Vanderbilts were society at all. There was some sort of an affair in Philadelphia to which, although the Vanderbilts were in town and thought they should have been asked, not one of their boxes was to care least of all. But it seems that Her very, very dearest friend is her beauti-

Vanderbilt mind the idea that the reigning queen was the representative of the snubbers. The feud was only slumbering, and it awoke to the realization that there were two things that must be accomplished—the seating of a queen who would be friendly to them at Newport, for there were lots of nice people over there, and one doesn't like to be waiting at the church indefinitely.

This realized, it remained only to map out the campaign.

Now He Is A Jolly Good Fellow

All Because His Conscience Was Stirred by the Same Neglected Wife Cartoon Which Inspired Her to Sue for a Divorce—So He Promptly Forsook His Club and Now They Are Enjoying a New Honeymoon.

KENTUCKY, where the horses are all predigreed and the women all beautiful, is just now the scene of matrimonial felicity the contemplation of which is a wet-nurse recipe from the dreary outlook created by the current "divorce wave."

In addition to this agreeable news comes a delicious morsel of gossip that is being relished wherever the Newport smart set has its ramifications—East, West, North and South.

The paper [illegible] have been loved [illegible] not my waist [illegible] make [illegible] new furniture [illegible] street in Louisville to which some mamma, [illegible] "Now, dear, your coat!"

"No!" he exclaims. "You are my own loved [illegible] not my waist [illegible] make me blush more than I have blushed since first I saw that accusing picture."

Quickly he replaces the shoes with the slippers and sinks back restfully. She looked at him with sparkling eyes.

"Splendid!" she exclaims. "The picture having performed its mission, is dead. Look! It is not yet 10 by the clock, but you are sitting beside me in your dressing gown and slippers, and I, the happiest wife in the world, complete the real living picture that old [illegible]

What a transformation! the room and the furniture appear the same, except for the absence of the cradle, the child having grown up to its own bedroom yet how different for now the cosy seat for two is occupied once more by an attentive husband and a happy wife.

So runs the gossip of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Louisville wherever the Smart Set holds sway. For the story it tells is so prettily is a true story.

Of all the beautiful Southern women who have captured the hearts and incidentally the fortunes of very wealthy men, the Misses Lee, of Louisville, were perhaps the most famous. Their brilliant matches were a matter of a whole season's comment in their time, so that it was no wonder that the tongues of society wagged when it was noised that Mrs. Otter, who was Jouett Lee, the younger sister, was suing her husband for divorce, and that she charged, of all remarkable things—neglect.

H. Wortham Otter was one of the best known young society and club men in the South when he was married to Jouett Lee. He was in great demand as a leader of cotillions, belonged to all the most exclusive clubs and was an automobilist whose enthusiasm led him to take many long trips. That meant that the pretty young wife was often alone through his pure thoughtlessness

Was it any wonder that she was led to believe that her husband had an utter disregard for domesticity and its corresponding obligations?

One night, as usual, she was sitting alone in her beautiful home. It was long after midnight as she sat there and sleepily glanced around to see if there was anything more to read. She picked up a little paper her husband had carelessly thrown aside before he dressed and went out for an evening at the club. She carelessly turned its pages until a picture took her attention. It was a cartoon called "For Better or Worse, a Jolly Good Fellow."

"My God, my God!" she exclaimed to the gas [illegible] and removed, at it might have posed for that picture. It is a page from my own life. Ah, it is too hard to be borne!"

"Yes, darling," answers [illegible] the picture that sent you hurrying after me with confessions of your thoughtlessness, confessions that you loved me as much as ever. Ah, my dear, it is the picture that brought us together again, secure to trust and mutual understandings."

How well he remembers that picture—the picture that so stirred his conscience: A beautiful young wife lonely and in tears, keeping vigil beside the cradle of her baby, while the cosy seat for two is empty and, appearing between the portieres, her dissipated, dishevelled, "jolly good fellow" of a husband, home at last, in the grey dawn, from his club.

Only now her pathetic figure is not there, for, [illegible] with happiness, she stands beside him.

"Oh!" he says, and he winces. "Dear heart, how can you be so cruel?"

"I need to put the perfect edge on my happiness," she laughs, kissing him. Behold the transformation scene

Mrs. Thomas was only too glad to do this for the difference between her sister and herself had inspired the artist. Whether or not that was the case, certain it was that the picture inspired her to start a divorce suit that caused all society in this country to become interested.

While the suit was pending, "Worth" Otter, as he is familiarly called among his society friends, visited New York. One day he was strolling down Fifth avenue, when he stopped to gaze into the window of an art store. A large copy of the picture occupied the centre of the window. Several persons standing near were commenting upon it.

"They say that the scene was taken from the life of a real society woman," said one. "Poor thing! So young and beautiful, too! Her husband must be a brutal sort to treat her in that way."

"Oh, the rich are not always the happy people," [illegible] another. "Many a poor girl is happier than that young wife."

Young Otter stood looking at the picture lost in thought. It was the first time the matter had been placed before him in this light, and the first time he had looked carefully at the picture.

"For he's a jolly good fellow," he read under the picture. "Poor, poor brute!"

The conscience-stricken young clubman lost no time in seeking his sister-in-law, Mrs. E. R. Thomas, and begging her to intercede for him.

He declared that these visits caused Mrs. Otter to become dissatisfied with her position in life. When she returned from her longest visit she informed him, he said, that she had found there was much more in life than Louisville had to offer, and that she had no intention of living with him again.

So they began to live apart. And Mr. Otter in answer to her divorce suit, declared further that when Mrs. Otter decided to go to Pass Christian, Miss., for the Winter she sold all their household effects to obtain funds for that purpose.

But all this was after she had seen that "jolly good fellow" cartoon—and before he occupying one of the most expensive suites at the Waldorf-Astoria—for which he believed his rich sister-in-law paid.

Together they went back to Louisville. What was said at the family conference that followed was not made public, but when it was over Mr. and Mrs. Otter went out to hunt another home for themselves, and soon were happily installed in it with Baby Otter, for whom both had so much love and for the possession of whom there had been many a passage-at-arms.

This then, says society, is the reason Mrs. E. R. Thomas has had to do her entertaining this Summer without the assistance of Mrs. Otter. Both of the young people have decided that they prefer a home life and have been living quietly in Louisville, trying to forget the heartaches that were caused by Mr. Otter's "good-fellowship."

But before Mr. Otter saw that cartoon in the art store window, and, "had his conscience well jogged," to quote the gossips, it is on record that he felt himself much aggrieved, in his affidavit answering his wife's suit for divorce he charged that his wife's frequent visits to her rich sister, Mrs. Thomas, in New York, had utterly spoiled her.

Mrs. Otter visited her sister at the St. Regis, where she lived with her husband, the millionaire horseman. Once Mr. Otter declared his wife remained away from him and their little daughter for eleven weeks had seen it. So runs the smart set story. When he saw the picture—well, perhaps he understood her visits to her sister in New York and her subsequent conduct, and felt his conscience stir, and became a changed man, and rushed off to gather up the scattered, tangled threads of his domestic life and succeeded, all through a picture.

So the Louisville clubs now see "Worth" Otter but seldom, and his wife has told all her friends that her greatest happiness is [illegible] in taking part in the gorgeous entertainments that her sister, Mrs. E. R. Thomas, gives in New York and Newport, but in their little home, where, after the lights are lit in the library, after dinner there is always some one sitting beside her in the cosy seat for two when she looks up from her book or sewing.

The Proper Way to Pack a Trunk.

SO many persons are ignorant of the best way to accomplish this task that a little advice appears not to be amiss.

Be sure to have everything gathered up, and placed just where you can lay your hands upon it, before you actually begin the packing process. Then put in the bottom of the trunk things which will not be injured if crushed. Here you may put all your underwear, your shoes and stockings; and also down the sides, in any little spaces which might chance to be left vacant, you can pack such small articles which happen to require more care.

Remember to fill your shoes and slippers with tissue paper, in order that they may not be pressed out of shape. If you are cramped for room, it is a good idea to put the stockings inside the shoes.

On the top of the underwear you should put your pearly tailor-made dress and any coats that you have provided to wear in the evenings over your light dresses.

Above them lay your gowns. Fold the sairie lengthwise in the creases into which they would fall if worn, and then turn the top over, so as to accommodate it to the length of the trunk. Remember that you gain more space by laying the clothes than by rolling things into balls and stuffing them into corners.

THE TITLED BEGGAR AND THE AMERICAN HEIRESS

How "The Shuttle," Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's Latest and Most Ambitious Novel, Portrays the Growth of a Typical New York Multi-Millionaire Family, and Amusingly Pictures the Trials of a Pauper Baronet in Winning the Daughter and Her Money, Too.

By Frances Hodgson Burnett,

From Her Novel "The Shuttle."

MORE or less assiduously, many writers of fiction have exploited the international marriage problem.

Putting the accent on the Anglo-American proposition—"My title and not your money"—it appears that Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, in her latest novel, "The Shuttle," has distanced all competitors.

Already this book—which is published by Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York—is being hailed as Mrs. Burnett's masterpiece. It is said that she herself so considers it.

Those portions of the first two or three chapters which appear on this page have an interest quite apart from the story itself, for the reason above suggested.

The characteristic narrative of the "Slosh" count and his New York millionaire father-in-law deserves to be "posted conspicuously."

"The Slosh count hadn't more than 25 cents, and he wasn't the kind to deal any of it out to his family."

No man knew when the shuttle began its slow and heaving weaving from where to where that it was held and guided by the great hand of Fate. Fate alone saw the weaving of the web it wove, the night of it, and its place in the making of a world's history. Men thought but little of either web or weaving, calling them by other names, and lighter ones, for the time unconscious of the strength of the thread thrown across thousands of miles of leaping, gray or blue ocean.

Fate and Life planned the weaving, and it seemed mere circumstance which guided the shuttle to and fro between two worlds divided by a gulf broader and deeper than ten thousands of miles of salt, fierce sea—the gulf of a bitter quarrel deepened by hatred and the shedding of brothers' blood, between the two worlds of East and West that was to will to draw nearer. Each held those who had rebelled against which their souls called tyranny, having struggled madly and shed blood in daring themselves free, turned stern backs upon their unconquered enemies, broke all ends that bound them to the past, forging for them new, kindly and rank, beginning with nerve disdain a new life.

But while the two worlds held apart, the shuttle, weaving slowly in the great hand of Fate, drew them closer and held them firm, each of them all unknowing for many a year that what had at first been mere threads of gossamer, was forming a web whose strength in time none could compute, whose severance could be accomplished but by tragedy and convulsion.

It was in comparatively early days that the first thread we follow was woven into the web. Many such have been woven since and have added greater strength than any others, twining the cord of sex and nonconciliating and race foundling. But this was a slight and weak one being only the thread of the life of one of Reuben Vanderpool's daughters—the pretty little, simple one whose name was Rosalie.

There lived in Kentucky who in early days of danger and traded with savages for the pelts of wild animals, was the lauded hero of stories of thrift and enterprise. Throughout his hard working life he had been strongly impelled to action by an abundant genius of commerce, expressing itself at the outset by the exhibition of courage in mere exchange and barter. . . . .

He married a woman who was a trader's daughter and shared his passion for gain. She was of North of England blood, her father having been a hard fisted small tradesman in an unimportant town, who had been daring enough to emigrate when emigration meant the facing of unknown dangers in a half savage land.

The first known Vanderpool transmitted to the son was an unyielding and his fever for gain. He had his one child. The second children bore much the foundations this afforded him, a fortune as much larger than the first as the rapid growth and increasing possibilities of the country gave him chance for opportunities to acquire. . . . .

The fourth known Vanderpool had no cousins, no neighbors, ever became upon a brownstone mansion built upon a fashionable New York thoroughfare rearing with traffic. To the farthest point of the Rocky Mountains the number of dollars that "mansion" did was always called out had cost was known. There may have existed Pueblo Indians who had heard rumors of the price of it. All the shopkeepers and farmers in the United States had read newspaper descriptions of its furnishings and knew the value of the avocado which hung in the bedrooms and boudoirs of the Misses Vanderpool.

It was a fact much cherished that Miss Rosalie's bath was of Carrara marble, and to good souls actively engaged in doing their own washing in small New England or Western towns it was a distinct luxury to be aware that the water in the Carrara marble bath was perfumed with Florentine Iris. Circumstances such as these seemed to become personal possessions, and even to lighten somewhat the burden of toil. . . . . .

Sir Nigel Anstruthers borrowed some money, went to New York and made his suit to nice little, silly Rosalie Vanderpool.

But the whole thing was unexpectedly disappointing and surrounded by irritating circumstances. He found himself face to face with a state of affairs such as he had not contemplated. In England, when a man married, certain practical matters could be inquired into and arranged by solicitors, the amount of the prospective bride's fortune, the allowances and settlements to be made, the position of the bridegroom in regard to peculiary matters. To put it simply a man found out where he stood and what he was to gain.

But at first, to his sardonic entertainment, and later to his disgusted annoyance, Sir Nigel gradually discovered that in the matter of marriage, Americans had an ingenious tendency to believe in the sentimental feelings of the parties concerned. . . . . .

Millionaires, it appeared, did not expect to make allowances to men who married their daughters; young women, it transpired, did not in the least realize that a man should be liberally endowed in payment for assuming the duties of a husband. If rich fathers made allowances they made them to their daughters themselves, who disposed of them as they pleased. In this case, of course, Sir Nigel privately argued with true acumen, it became the husband's business to see that what his wife pleased should be what most agreeably coincided with his own views and conveniences.

His most illuminating experience had been the hearing of some long, hard headed rich stock brokers, with a vulgar sense of humor, out-jving themselves quite unconsciously one night at a club over a story one of them was relating of an unsatisfactory German son-in-law who had demanded an income. He was a man of small title, who had married the narrator's daughter, and after some months spent in his father in law's house had thought it but proper that his financial position should be put on a practical footing.

"He brought her back after the bridal tour to make us a visit," said the storyteller, a sharp-featured man with a quaint dry mouth, which seemed to express a perpetual, repressed appreciation of passing events. "I had nothing to say against that, because we were all glad to see her home and her mother had been missing her. But weeks passed and months passed and there was no mention made of them going over to settle in the Slosh we'd heard so much of, and in time it came out that the Slosh thing"—Anstruthers realised with gall in his soul that the "bore," as he called him, meant "Sir Nigel," and that the misproununciation was at once a matter of humor and derision—"wasn't his at all. He was his elder brother's. The whole lot of them were counts, and not one of them seemed to own a dime. The Slosh count hadn't more than 25 cents, and he wasn't the kind to deal any of it out to his family. So Lily's count would have to go clerking in a dry goods store, if he proposed to support himself.

"Lily's mother use to find her crying in her bedroom, and it came out by degrees that it was because Adolf had been quarrelling with her and saying sneering things about her family."

"When her mother talked to him he was insulting."

"But he didn't propose to do it. He thought he'd get onto a soft thing. Of course we are an easy-going lot and we should have stood for him if he had been a nice fellow, but he wasn't. Lily's mother downright happy, when he saw how humane to and her crying in her bedroom, and why I listened to him. He positively It came out by degrees that it was be- swelled up with hope and comfort. He reause Adolf had been quarrelling with her thought I was going to turn out well, real Damn it! and saying sneering things about her family. When her mother talked to him he was insulting. Then bills began to come in and Lily was expected to get me to pay them. And they were not the kind of bills a decent fellow calls on another man to pay.

"But I did it five or six times to make it easy for her. I didn't tell her that they gave me a better chap than himself side by lights on the situation. But that didn't work well. He thought I did it because I had to, and he began to feel free and easy about it, and didn't try to cover his tracks so much when he sent in a new lot.

He was always working Lily. He began to consider himself master of the house. He intimated that a private carriage ought to be kept for them. He said it was beggarly that he should have to consider the rest of the family when he wanted to go out. . . . . .

"He went perfectly crazy after a month or so and ordered me about and patronized me as if I were a bootblack he meant to teach something to. So at last I had a talk with Lily and told her that I was going to put an end to it. . . . . So I sent for him and had a talk with him in my office. I led him on to saying all he had on his mind. He explained to me what a condescension it was for a man like himself to marry a girl like Lily. . . . . I rubbed my head and looked worried every now and then and cleared my throat apologetically just to warm him up.

I can tell you that fellow felt happy well. I was going to pay up just as a vulgar New York father-in-law ought to do, and thank God for the blessed privilege.

"So when he'd finished I cleared my throat in a nervous, ingratiating kind of way again and I asked him kind of anxiously what he thought would be the proper thing for a base-born New York millionaire to do under the circumstance—what he would approve of himself."

Sir Nigel was disgusted to see the narrator twist his mouth into a sweet, shrewd, repressed grin, even as he expectorated into the nearest receptacle. The grin was greeted by a shout of laughter from his companions.

"What did he say, Stebbins?" someone cried.

"He said," explained Mr. Stebbins, deliberately, "he said that an allowance was the proper thing. He said that a man of his rank must have resources and that it wasn't dignified for him to ask his wife or his wife's father for money when he wanted it. He said an allowance was what he felt he had a right to expect. And then he twisted his mustache and said, 'What proposition did I make'—what would I allow him?"

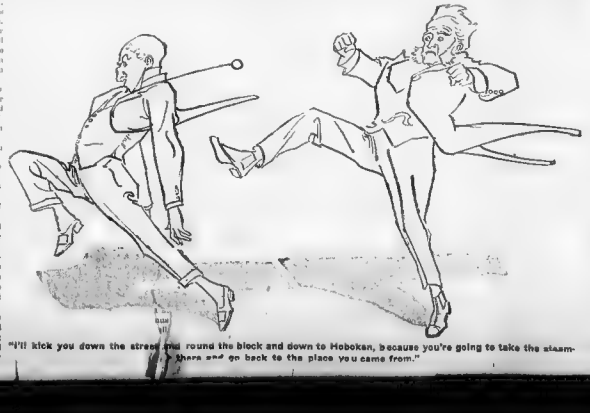
The story teller's hearers evidently knew him well. Their laughter was louder than before.

"Let's hear the rest, Joe. Let's hear it!"

"Well," replied Mr. Stebbins almost thoughtfully, "I just got up and said, 'Well, it won't take long to answer that. I've always been fond of my children and Lily is rather my pet. She's always had everything she wanted and she always shall, she's a good girl and she deserves it. I'll allow you'—the significant deliberation of his drawl could scarcely be described—'I'll allow you just five minutes to get out of this room before I kick you out, and if I kick you out of the room I'll kick you down the stairs, and if I kick you down the stairs I shall have got up blood comfortably warmed up and I'll kick you down the street and round the block and down to Hoboken, because you're going to take the steamer there and go back to the place you came from—to the Slosh thing or whatever you call it. We haven't a diamond out of use for you here.' And, believe it or not, gentlemen"—looking around with the wry mouthed smile, "he took that passage and back he went. And Lily's living with her mother, and I mean to hold on to her."

Sir Nigel got up and left the club when the story was finished. He took a long walk down Broadway, gnawing his lip and holding his head in the air. He used handsome language at intervals in a low voice. Some of it was addressed to his fate and some of it to the vulgar mercantile conscience and shiftlessness of other people.

"They don't know what they are in king of," he said. "It is unheard of. What do they expect? I never thought of this. I'm like a rat in a trap."



"I'll kick you down the street and round the block and down to Hoboken, because you're going to take the steamer there and go back to the place you came from."

"I asked him kind of anxiously what he thought would be the proper thing for a base-born New York millionaire to do under the circumstances—what he would approve of himself."

that the odds are overwhelmingly on the side of the Vanderbilts, despite their pretentatee and millions and dasa. Wineme Mrs. "Joe" is of warrior blood and has her hosts. She has also beauty, millions and a wonderful tact that will be three powerful weapons. It is true enough that the name of Widener is not exactly one to open even the outer rooms of the holy of holies, but her own birth, she was Ella Pancoast, is plentifully sufficient, and in society the Salic law holds good. A princess is still a princess if she marries a thrall.

dependent upon the fight and its outcome is the case of Mrs. E. Moore Norrie Robinson. Mrs. Robinson came out of the West; she was Alicia Ivers, a San Francisco beauty. Of perfect blonde type with curling masses of golden hair, her type is statuesque. Saint Gaudens thought her arms and shoulders the most perfect he had ever seen. There was no real reason why she should not at once have entered the seats of the mighty, but she didn't. San Francisco is such a way from Philadelphia and the conservatism at the latter place is of such a wonderful thickness.

"Just a little too much brominess," said society, languidly.

If the Paul ball is to be the great battlefield in Philadelphia, the gage has already been thrown. Mrs. A Lanfrey Norrie has met the picketts. It was last week that a curious thing happened. Mrs. Norrie invited twenty guests to meet Gladys Vanderbilt and the Count she is to marry. Almost when the bids was ready Mrs. Norrie received a curt note from Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt regretting that they could not attend. It is probable that a hostess was never put in a worse or more embarrassing position. The Vanderbilts had before signified their willingness to come. Why was it done? It is the feud, says society. Mrs. Norrie wouldn't swear allegiance to the faction.

Decidedly society needs a Hague just now. If for nothing else than to address what are the rules of civilized warfare in society. Apparently nothing is barred. The [illegible] will show how dead it

THIS DREADFUL WIFE-KILLING KING

His Majesty of Annam, Who Slaughtered 13 of His 1,000 Wives, Now Coming to Amuse Himself in Paris.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—THAN Thai, the terrible king of Annam has been compelling more than a white ghost on the throne of the Yvette government.

Than Thai, it will be remembered, was deposed for slaughtering, strangling a great number of his wives with fiendish cruelties, and one of his sons has been enthroned in his place. France exercises a protectorate over Annam, which is a large county in Southeastern Asia, adjoining the French possessions in Indo-China. France controls the trade of the country, and mates most out of the place, but permits a native king to look after purely native affairs.

Now that King Than Thai has been deposed, it becomes a difficult question as to what to do with him. He cannot be treated as a common criminal, partly because of a brief period of nominal coronation, he has slaughtered about a score of wives. The natives of Annam would feel shocked if their chief were treated with disrespect, and they would even rebel, for they hate the instrument of submission to royalty dear to them by a thousand years of servitude.

It is not even considered right to deprive him of his wives who remain to him. Now, in the eyes of Annam, a married man ought to own as many wives as he can get from his wives.

It is true that the native law does not allow more than one wife of a certain ordinary rank, but the law of Annam, a law which he enjoys to practice under the recognized and protected by France. It would certainly be a violation of the promises and pledges made to the world by His Majesty Loubet if the wives were separated from him, would leave great widows, and that state to Annam is a most disreputable and undesirable one.

Incidentally it can be stated that it is France's obligations toward the King of Annam are similar to those of the United States towards the Sultan of Sulu. This country would not think of interfering with that Sultan's domestic relations.

On the other hand, France is a humane country, cannot permit the King of Annam to murder his wives to his pleasure.

The only course of France, therefore, is to accustom the King with all his wives in a manner suitable to his rank and descent, and at the same time keep so extremely close watch on him to see that he plunges into no more fits of murderous madness. This, obviously, is an exceedingly difficult task. It is almost impossible for the French civil charged with the surveillance of the King to be quite sure how he is treating every one of his thousand dogs at every moment of the twenty four hours.

Just how his Majesty proposes to pay a visit to Paris, and as this is a privilege which has been allowed to Queen Ranavalona of Madagascar, and other deposed monarchs who are captives of the French, it is not considered reasonable to refuse it to Than Thai. It is hoped that the sight of France will impress him with the strength of the country, and that he will go back and tell his people that they had better behave. The hope is also entertained that the amusements of Paris will put him in a cheerful frame of mind, in which he will cease to have murderous thoughts.

The proposed visit, however, necessarily involves considerable uneasiness. It is possible that the Annamite king will be attacked by his bloodthirsty madness while in Paris. Will he take out his sword and chop off the heads of the fashionable women of Paris, who will go distinctly out to see him at receptions and entertainments? Will he run amuck in the Bois de Paris, or some other place of popular resort? These are disconcerting questions.

The atrocities which led to Than Thai's deposition were concealed from the outside world long after they had been perpetrated. One day he assembled all his wives in the throne room, as their statements made afterward to the French officials show.

The poor little creatures knelt down before him as if he were a divinity. He clapped his hands and huge muscular slaves sprang forward to do his bidding. The King indicated one of his youngest and prettiest wives and ordered them to bring her before him.

With his terrible Malay sword he cut long strips of flesh from the woman's body. The demon King gloated over every detail and thrilled with pleasure as he listened to the victim's shrieks. All the other wives were compelled to watch every detail of the torture in order that they might be filled with terror and suffer in anticipation of their own turn coming.

The next day the King slowly dissected a woman, joint by joint and limb by limb. Another was burnt with irons. In one case he began by cutting off the woman's nose, ears, hands and feet. Every day he invented some new torture.

One of the victims was the Emperor's favorite wife. He killed her with his own hands, and subjected her to peculiarly atrocious tortures, the details of which cannot be described. But before he killed her she succeeded in scratching his face with her terrible nails, which were kept several inches long and sharpened at the tips, according to the fashion prevalent in that part of the world.

When she was at last dead, he cut her to pieces and served the remains at a banquet, which he forced the other members of his family to attend.

Ten of his wives he hung to the ceiling with hooks. One was kept in boiling oil till she died. Two were thrown into the cages of hungry tigers, who devoured them.

Thirteen unfortunate women were slaughtered or tortured to death in one week. The King was not satisfied with killing his own wives, but began to pay attentions to the wives and daughters of his leading subjects. He sent for his prime minister, Tong Doc, and ordered him to bring his young daughter to the palace. Tong Doc was most cordially received by his sovereign, who, however, artfully contrived to send him away on an errand. When Tong Doc returned, he found his daughter laid out upon a great slab of onyx, with the King handling a lot of surgical instruments and about to begin vivisection upon her.

Immediately after this the French Resident decided to intervene and entered the palace with a force of soldiers. There a terrible spectacle awaited him. The throne room and adjoining apartments were littered with dead bodies. Many victims of the torture were still alive. Several of them were hanging from the walls by hooks passed through the fleshy parts of the legs. Some were lying about without noses, eyes, ears and hands. The surviving wives were in a state of unspeakable terror.

The French official arrested the King, and Dr. Dumas, the chief medical officer of the French forces, declared him insane, because they were committed in the seclusion of the harem. His mental disease is well recognized by alienists.

Few persons have the same opportunity to indulge this murderous mania as the deposed King Than Thai of Annam had. He chose his wives from the whole kingdom. They were divided into two classes. The wives of the first class were chosen from the daughters of leading personages of the country and were comparatively few in number. The wives of the second class were chosen from a kind of opera house that is maintained in connection with the royal palace. They were thoroughly trained to dance and sing in order to amuse the King before they were admitted to the harem.

As early symptom of the King's approaching insanity was shown by the extraordinary bullets and dances in which he trained these women to take part. He forced them to give spectacles which were literally realizations of a madman's dreams. He spent his whole time training them to give these exhibitions and neglected to oppress his own subjects. At first he allowed these spectacles to be held openly, and the few foreigners resident in his Kingdom were invited to be present, but as his mania assumed a more bloodthirsty form he became secretive, and this course aroused suspicion concerning his doings.

The territory of Than Thai is extensive and wealthy. It contains a population of 6,000,000. His principal palace is an extraordinary specimen of Oriental architecture. It is somewhat Chinese in character, but has many peculiarities of its own. It is covered all over with carving of amazing minuteness, which required almost incredible labor to execute. The palace covers 600 acres, its size being made chiefly necessary by the vast extent of the harem. No one is allowed to enter without taking off his sandals or shoes at the door. A still more remarkable rule is that no dead person is allowed to be carried out by the door. The body must be lifted out through the roof and removed in that way.

The King still occupies the palace, because it would be difficult to keep him elsewhere without separating him from his thousand wives and his numerous children. His son and successor, being only eight years old and still unmarried, has not yet reached much age.

Since his murderous outbreak the King has been kept under close surveillance of French medical officers, and they now give their opinion that he is cured. In fact, he is quite an amiable and entertaining companion. It is well known that the shocking mania from which he suffered may easily pass away. In fact the cheerful companionship of French officers and the knowledge that suddenly or with all to check the indulgence of his mania may do much to cure him.

Nevertheless, it is doubtful if the King is permanently cured, and this makes the prospect of letting him loose among the curious and susceptible female population of Paris a very uncertain and dangerous one.

The Murders in the Rue Morgue

How Art Collector Macdonald's Luxurious Apartment Was Wrecked by a Mysterious Miscreant of Superhuman Strength Whose Identity Was Finally Revealed by His Enormous Finger Prints.

Paris, Oct. 19

All Paris has been excited and amazed by an actual occurrence which bears an extraordinary resemblance to that most dreadful and blood-curdling of Poe's tales of mystery—"The Murders in the Rue Morgue!"

It is a remarkable tribute to the quality of Edgar Allan Poe's genius that his tales, spite of their strange and seemingly impossible character, find confirmation from time to time in the events of life.

On the fourth door of a large apartment house, No. 23 Rue Blanche, a very aristocratic thoroughfare, resides Alexander Macdonald, who is a teacher of Kindergarten to the children of two more aristocratic families and has amassed a comfortable fortune. Mr. Macdonald is a connoisseur of objects of art, and his splendid apartment was crammed with priceless treasures which he had spent nearly thirty years in gathering from the four corners of Europe. Although he was born in New York and is a graduate of Harvard, Mr. Macdonald has lived nearly all his life abroad, and from Paris to Moscow his name is known among the great dealers in antiquities and works of art.

He numbers among his friends the most distinguished artists and literary men and women of the French capital, and they delight to view the marvellous collection in his apartment at No. 23 Rue Blanche.

One afternoon Mr. Macdonald had been at a reception given by the Countess von Saldern at her house in the Champs Elysees, and as all the afternoon in conversation about Turkey's latest protest against the Russian government's suppression of the books Ivan Strenoff, an attache of the Russian Embassy here, but a naturalized French citizen, was defending the right of the Russian Government to purge its own people and exiled forever from the land of his birth, was inveighing against the czar and czardom.

So the afternoon passed all too quickly, and it was almost dusk when Mr. Macdonald knocked at the porter's lodge, was admitted by the concierge, and mounted the eight flights of stairs to his apartment at 23 Rue Blanche, humming the latest song of the boulevard, and thinking that the last rays of the setting sun would in such a beautiful light on a new acquisition which he had but the day before added to his collection.

But be it known, the only reason why Macdonald dwells at the laborious altitude of four pairs of stairs is that his beloved treasures may be displayed to their best advantage and enjoy proper lighting.

On the second landing he stopped to pass the time of day with Madame Lafarge, the charming widow of the famous lawyer who was killed last year in an automobile accident at Auteuil, and invited her to come the following day to see his new picture. She accepted, and with a heart as light as his steps he ascended the two flights which still separated him from his abode. And lo! and behold! it occurred to him that his manservant, Jean, had been given a day off to attend the wedding of his sister at Versailles, and he hesitated. Well, he would go up and dress for dinner and betake himself to the Cafe Royal, three blocks down the street. And in a moment his latchkey was in the lock.

Flinging the door open, he stepped in side and touched the button that threw on the electric light in the softly shaded recess in the ceiling of the little reception hall. His eyes swept the scene before him, and in an instant his happy mood changed to one of horror and anger.

"Thieves!" was the first word he uttered.

His beautiful apartment had been wrecked. The entrance hall was in a state of indescribable confusion. The heavy mirror in the corner had been smashed to bits by a heel of a riding boot, and the polished leg of the boot itself had been ripped to pieces like so much tissue paper.

A dress shoe reposed on the edge of the broken bow-shaped colored glass shade that had covered the light above his head, and its mate had been torn in two as a boy breaks a stick of candy. Two silk umbrellas had been turned completely inside out, and the covers tattered and torn, while the fragments of several canes, including one gold-headed ebony stick of great value, were scattered over the bare floor. The beautiful Bagdad rug, which had covered the hall floor, was nowhere to be seen. (Later its shreds were discovered in a waste basket, where they had been carefully deposited by the marauder.)

One glance was enough. Mr. Macdonald pulled the bell for the concierge, dashed down stairs and telephoned for the police. Then he and the employees of the pension armed themselves and ascended again to the fourth floor in order to surround the enemy if he were to be found.

The hall was just as Mr. Macdonald had left it a few moments before, and tears came to his eyes as he noticed that a much prized original by Heilleu, which had graced the wall, was missing from its accustomed place. The attacking party advanced cautiously into the dining room on the left and switched on the light. What a scene met his gaze. Priceless Sevres, costly alabaster lamps, gilded vases and cut glass decanters were thrown in a heap under the table, thousands of dollars' worth of breakables converted in an instant into valueless debris. The curtains had been torn from the windows and ripped into strips as though some one intended to weave them into carpets. The heavy chairs were piled in a heap at one end of the room, the polished mahogany table had been deeply scratched, every drawer in the sideboard had been pulled out and the knives and spoons were strewn all over the place. The forks had all been jabbed into the panelled walls and were bent and twisted out of shape.

Four old English hunting prints of great rarity and value had been ripped off the wall and deliberately destroyed. The ruin was appalling.

The kitchen was not as bad as the dining room. Every breakable piece of crockery had been smashed to atoms, the one chair was bindlewood, and knives and forks had been jammed into the fireplace, and wedged between the bricks. Flour was mixed with salt, sugar and pepper had been carefully poured together, and the spices and condiments had been liberally poured about the floor, over the melange of decimated crockery.

But the large drawing room, depository of the art treasures of Mr. Macdonald, was the climax of ruin. In the centre of the costly carpet a broken Louis XVI. lounge was shedding its last drop of fish into a slowly widening pool; three rare old China vases had been broken with great care into the smallest possible fragments, and the tea were heaped up on the mantel, upholstery had been ripped from the furniture, every pane of glass had been broken out of the six windows, and priceless Gobeline tapestries were tangled ribbons.

And the paintings. It was a sight to make angels weep.

Every last one of them—more than a hundred—had been torn out of its frame or slashed beyond repair, while the beloved Meissonier, his latest acquisition, together with a Corot and a small Titian, adorned the chandelier, one branch of it thrust violently through each painting.

Broken bronzes lay among the fragments of Sevresan vases and rare laces had been snipped into a thousand pieces with a pair of scissors. The whole place was simply a wreck. Not a mirror in the bedrooms but had been smashed, not a pillow but the feathers had been scattered over the debris, not a mattress but was torn to pieces, nor was there a whole sheet or counterpane left in the establishment.

Mr. Macdonald's library was even worse. His books had all been tumbled from their shelves and handfuls of pages carelessly torn out at random, several valuable editions de luxe being entirely ruined. His private desk had been broken open, and private papers of all sorts torn up and scattered about.

But apparently nothing had been stolen, and the sole object had been destruction. The police came, and saw, and wondered. Mr. Macdonald stormed, fumed and swore in his lons. And the whole affair was a mystery.

The door of the apartment was found securely locked, as was every window. The chimney would not admit any one, and there was no sign to show who had caused the damage or how the marauder had obtained entrance or made his exit. Each of the bayou seemed as if it must have been wrought by superhuman force. Few men are strong enough to tear a boot in two, or to rip up with their hands heavy curtains and strongly woven tapestries.

The police searched carefully promised immediate results, and accomplished nothing. Mr. Macdonald himself had not the remotest idea who could possibly have wished to smash his so flagrantly, and the affair was apparently as inexplicable as "The Murders in the Rue Morgue."

For many days the secret police puzzled their wits over the affair and both one of them are they seemingly inspected the scene of the outrage, and the wrecked apartment was left exactly in the condition in which it had originally been found by Mr. Macdonald. He, poor man, was stricken down by his ill fortune, and remained in bed at the home of friends in Passy, a third into Amateur detectives of all kinds rend their wits at solving the mystery and the Paris newspapers offered rewards for the detection of the criminal and the explanation of the mysterious crime.

A singular fact was that the criminal had left impressions of his hands in various parts of the apartment. After upsetting the inkpot he had plentifully besmeared his hands with ink and he had left imprints that the miscreant was a person of marvel of them on wall paper, on hangings, on loss agility.

It was this peculiarity that first sug in them. A small iron safe was discove under the bed (not under the New Yor and other papers of little consequence.

"We have gone so far as to combine the ideas of an agility astounding, a strength superhuman, a ferocity brutal, a butchery without motive, a grotesquerie in horror absolutely alien from Humanity."

All that is direct from Poe's wonderful story applies exactly to the mystery of the Rue Blanche. Then listen to the language of Dupin, the "Sherlock Holmes" of the "Murders in the Rue Morgue," as he explains to his friend the logic of the case:

"I wish you," said Dupin, "to glance at the little sketch I have traced upon this paper. It is a facsimile drawing of what has been described in one portion of the testimony as 'dark bruises and deep indentations of finger nails' upon the throat of Mlle. L'Espanaye, and in another (by M.M. Dumas and Etienne) as 'a series of livid spots, evidently the impression of fingers.'

"You will perceive," continued my friend, spreading out the paper upon the table before us, "that this drawing gives the idea of a firm and fixed hold. There is no slipping apparent. Each finger has retained—possibly until the death of the victim—the fearful grasp by which it originally imbedded itself. Attempt, now, to place all your fingers, at the same time, in the respective impressions as you see them."

I made the attempt in vain.

"We are possibly not giving this matter a fair trial," said he. "The paper is spread out on a plane surface, but the human throat is cylindrical. Here is a block of wood, the circumference of which is about that of the throat. Wrap the drawing around it, and try the experiment again."

I did so; but the difficulty was even more obvious than before. "This," I said, "is the work of no human hand."

"Read, now," said Dupin, "this passage from Cuvier."

It was a minute anatomical and generally descriptive account of the large fulvous orang-outang of the East Indian islands. The gigantic stature, the prodigious strength and activity, the wild ferocity and the imitative propensities of these mammalia are sufficiently well known to all. I understood the full horrors at once.

The marks on Macdonald's furniture were as of human hands. But measurement showed them to be the fingers of a man. The rest was easy. Very little search demonstrated that a large ape had been missing for some days from a house three doors away from 23 Rue Blanche.

But the puzzle of how he obtained access to the apartment which he had so thoroughly wrecked still remained, until the skylight over Mr. Macdonald's salon was examined. Then it appeared that a large pane of glass was missing. Its frame although from the door beneath there was no indication of it. The ape had evidently climbed up to the roof of its own house and crossed over to No. 23, where it obtained entrance.

Stooping down it had upset the small table which held the Louis XVI. lounge and in that instance for destruction was at work in all directions. Upon the floor were found four tapestries an earring of topaz, three large silver spoons, three smaller of metal d'Alger, and two bags, containing nearly four thousand francs in gold. The drawers of a bureau, which stood in one corner, were open, and had been, apparently, rifled, although many articles still remained. Paris was dazed and puzzled. Now, that explained, all Paris laughs—except Mr. Macdonald.

How to Be Beautiful, Though Stout.

THE trouble with the stout girl is that she keeps herself too much in the public view. She is self-conscious, and that self-consciousness leads her to display herself more than she really ought.

Few stout women walk well. It is impossible to balance so much flesh gracefully, and the walk is awkward. Perhaps it is a waddle; or, worse still, it may be that combination of heartiness and humbleness which affects so many stout women that is a jog trot. The stout woman who walks well is scarcely ever found.

The stout woman has her faults in dress, badly, for nearly all stout women dress poorly. Not she has this in her favor, that she can look thinner if she wants to do so. Looking slender is rather easy if one will only try it. Actually, it is the producing of an optical illusion which makes one long or that the figure is taller and more slender than it really is. It is a thing that can be very easily managed if one will only try it a little.

The gloves of the stout woman should be the color of her umbrella handle. Most stout women appear to have much too short for them. The dark umbrella, with a long, dark handle, and the long, dark pointed gloves, will make the arms look less fat. It gives a pretty effect, and one that ought to be studied by every stout woman with short arms.

The woman who suffers from obesity always sits down awkwardly. She has a trick of balancing herself on the very edge of a chair. This gives her a look as though she would break in two. She is ungraceful and uncomfortable.

The stout woman, balancing herself upon the edge of a high chair is a common sight. She is exceedingly uncomfortable to witness, and also accentuates her appearance when seated in this manner.

She should, when possible, select a low chair. And she should sit squarely upon it, with her back against the back of the chair. Most stout women lose too tightly to sit down squarely upon a chair, but the ladings should be loosened until it is possible to be seated in comfort.

When the stout woman puts on her corset she should test it. She should sit down flatly and squarely, and she should stand and sit down again. If it is impossible to do this, she may know that she is laced too tightly.

A woman afflicted thus can make herself look much thinner by wearing trimmings that run in vertical lines rather than in horizontal. She can look more slender still by wearing perfectly plain materials, with no stripes or figures. Black is also the best color for her in black, or very dark blue.

Stout women should never wear satin. Satin has too much reflection in its depths. It makes the shoulder-blades look very stout. Satin really doubles one's size after one's waist has reached twenty-nine inches. The stout woman should never wear velvet, for it makes her a quarter of an inch bigger on every side. Nor will she wear rough silks or anything that makes her girth larger than it ought to be. Her materials are fine, glossy broadcloths; thin, delicate, dark voiles; the softest of deep cassimeres, and all the lovely fine dark goods. She should never try the showy, heavy stuffs and—almost without saying—she should never wear plaids, checks, stripes or flowered materials.

Sometimes in a woman is always noticeable at the back, just below the neck. A protuberance of fat collects here, and has the effect of making the back look rounded and shapeless, when it should be straight and perfectly flat. It also is the cause of the head being thrown forward, instead of being gracefully poised on the shoulders in an upright line.

The stout woman who wishes to get a little thinner can begin with her back. The chances are that there is this cushion at the back of the neck, and that it is in the shape of an unsightly hunch, which spoils the set of her dress and makes her look round shouldered. If she can get rid of this hunch of fat she will look better.

Exercise will take away this fat. But it must be local exercise. If the stout woman, when she undresses at night, will take a towel in her hands and will pass the towel across the back of her neck so as to strike this lump, she will have begun at the beginning of her reducing methods. The lump can be exercised off but she must use the towel herself, and she must keep at it night and morning. She must hold the ends of the towel at arms' length and pull upon first one and then the other.

The waist line can be reduced in much the same way. Walking might possibly accomplish the result, and dancing is pretty sure to reduce it, but a strip of canvas or a big, soft bath towel will reduce it much better. The towel is thrown round the waist, and is pulled back and forth so that it strikes the back just at the waist line. The arms are extended, and the towel is one-armed in brisk fashion for two or three minutes.

TELL-YOUR-OWN-FORTUNE A Halloween Game

1. A false friend is trying to wean you from your true love.
2. You are hesitating between two; decide quickly or you will lose both.
3. Expect soon to take a journey, which will lead to fortune.
4. Beware of any one who asks your confidence this day.
5. Cast the dark one from out of thy thoughts and take the fair one.
6. Though misfortune has kept you company, brighter days are in store.
7. Your enemies are numerous, but you will conquer.
8. Do not be guided by others; act for yourself.
9. You can expect to find your affinity this year.
10. Good news is in store for you.
11. Prepare and confer.
12. Look before you leap.
13. Fortune will soon smile upon you.
14. You are thinking of one not worthy of you. Cast this one out of your thoughts.
15. Kiss patience and your desires will come true.
16. Your heart soon may sing like a lark.
17. Your name is your most valuable possession.
18. Your fortune is yet unknown.

DIRECTIONS.

The heart is placed flat on the table. Whoever desires to know the future closes the eyes and lays the open hand on the heart, and then raises the hand all but one finger. The finger remaining indicates a certain space on the heart which reveals the future. The position of the heart should be changed after each operation by giving it a few turns around, so that the results may not be the same for each attempt. It can also be pinned to the wall with the person standing a few paces away, who must close the eyes and walk forward, placing the index finger on the heart. The space where the finger rests foretells the future.

SAM LOYD'S RELATION PUZZLE

Our puzzle this week is somewhat different, and will be found very interesting for our clever puzzlists to solve.

A gentleman met a lady in the park and said to her: "I think I know you." The lady replied: "You ought to, as your mother was my mother's only daughter!"

If you can tell us what relation the lady was to the gentleman you may win one of the puzzle books which will be given as prizes to 1,000 of our readers who send in the correct answer.

"THE TEST OF COURAGE"

HUMAN foresight can avert many troubles, but the time comes to most of us when our plans go awry and we face failure.

Circumstances are sometimes bound to be too much for us, and we are likely to see the sum total of what we have accomplished swept away.

Then is the time when what is really in a man shows.

It is not hard to keep on going ahead as long as the sun of prosperity is shining and the solid ground of successful effort is beneath our feet.

But when the tornado of adversity has swept over us, whether it comes in the shape of business reverses or loss by fire, flood or storm; the loss of a highly paid position or the failure of a crop—then is when a man must summon all that is in him and meet the loss with spirit and determination.

Misfortune should be personified as a coward. Shrink before it; show the least sign of giving up, and it will come upon a man with fourfold power. Show it a bold front, and its terrors will diminish and you can rout it.

Determination, grit, perseverance and ambition are the weapons that will rebuild the public that a bitter fate has destroyed.

With these tools many a man has reared on the foundations of a shattered fortune a fortune many times as fair.

But those who have thus wrested good from ill have had to work quick. The laggard has no chance. There is no time to be wasted in repining; no breathing space for self-indulgent retrospects.

No matter how great the misfortune that overtakes a man, as long as it is short of death, he rarely loses everything. Houses may disappear, fortunes may melt, businesses may fail, but even as he stands amid the wreck there is with him knowledge, that nothing can take from him, and experience, that cannot be destroyed.

In the Western mountains they have a saying that no man is lost as long as he has his horse and his gun; his camp may be lost, but he has with him the means to make another and to take care of himself while he is doing it.

So it is with a man carving out his future. As long as he has the spirit of endeavor in him, as long as he has his pluck, he can compel circumstances and succeed at last.

"Shrink from Disaster, and It Will Overwhelm You; Face It, and You Will Rout It"

The story of high American lawlessness has echoed in many homes and many business houses all over this country during the past few days.

What some people are calling a financial house cleaning" in Wall Street is, in plainer words, a revelation of the fact that the biggest financiers in the country, protected by dishonest officials and secure in their influence on certain judges, HAVE BEEN ROBBING THE ENTIRE PUBLIC—THE HONEST INVESTING PUBLIC ESPECIALLY, ON A GIGANTIC SCALE.

These men above the law in this country. And they are the most dangerously lawless men in the country. They are the men that draw in advance on the nation's resources, taking by themselves the earnings of the future. Putting on the backs of the people an enormous load in the way of dividends on watered stock.

These dishonest men are not content to monopolize public necessities. That doesn't give them money fast enough.

First, they obtain possession of a monopoly, charging the people an exorbitant price for bad service, and then they capitalize their monopoly extravagantly, issuing their hundreds of millions of watered stock and unloading these hundreds of millions upon the public.

Just at present there is investigation. The truth is coming out, and proof is given that honest banks are [illegible] honest business men are [illegible] honest enterprises and actions are [illegible] because of the criminal reckless [illegible] of those that stand above the law under our system.

A FEW INDIVIDUALS are responsible for present conditions in this country today. At present, the financial troubles are chiefly troubles of the more prosperous citizens. Those that own stocks and bonds find that they are worth less than they were. Those that need money to carry on commerce find that it is impossible or difficult to obtain the necessary credit.

Years ago this newspaper pointed out the big criminals and specified their crimes. Years ago, when the [illegible] more tampered with and it was discovered that office boys were used as dummies to [illegible] the heart newspapers endeavored to force punishment of the guilty big men.

If at that time one or two of the big pirates had been put in the penitentiary, WE SHOULD NOT HAVE TO-DAY'S COLLAPSE, WHICH THREATENS ALL CLASSES. It must be remembered that the rich man's difficulty today means the discharge of the workingman to-morrow.

Business men now are realizing, as workingmen will soon be realizing, unless prompt action be taken, that when one gang of big criminals steals a hundred millions SOMEBODY HAS GOT TO PAY THE HUNDRED MILLIONS.

Those who a few years back accused this newspaper of "anarchy," "class hatred" and "disregard of property rights" when we told the plain truth wish now, a little late, that they had listened to the truth and acted upon it.

They realize to-day that above the law there have been a few self-appointed exploiters of the people, and that bad judges have been first of all responsible for this condition—judges that would not enforce the law against a big man, judges that were taken from the big man's private law office and put upon the bench at his command. We have told the people of the United States for a long time that they could not have genuine republican government with power divided between two parties and both parties owned by ONE set of dishonest financial bandits.

To-day those that called this newspaper "anarchistic" because it told the truth are seeing more clearly.

They have found out that the REAL attacks upon property rights were the attacks of a few big men on the property rights of the small investor, of the small business man, of the honest citizen of every class.

In this country the moonshiner who makes illicit whiskey robs Uncle Sam of a few pennies or dollars at most. Uncle Sam's officers shoot him dead if necessary without hesitation.

The big man above the law robs the government of hundreds of millions in forest lands, in refusal to pay taxes, in all kinds of government swindling, from bond deals to armor plate deals. NOTHING is done to HIM.

The prisons are filled with little nobodies, while a few big somebodies, as you now learn from financial revelations, steal in one day from the general public more than all the criminals in all the jails ever stole in a year.

Readers, the trouble is this: While you have been voting, you have really had nothing to say about GOVERNMENT. You have allowed the few big men ABOVE THE LAW to name your judges, to name your sheriffs and to name your prosecuting attorneys in both of the old parties. Those that should have defended you have been the creatures of the men that exploit you. You have simply marched up and cast your votes to keep in power the men ABOVE THE LAW.

You have got to realize that judges are the real rulers of the country. William Randolph Hearst, addressing the Independence League Convention in New York City recently, said:

"The Legislature has the power to make the laws if a majority of the legislators are in favor of them; the executive has the power to veto the laws unless two-thirds of the legislators are in favor of them; but the judiciary has the power to veto the laws if all the legislators are in favor of them and all the people are in favor of them."

This is a condensed statement of facts for voters to think about.

You must have judges that will represent you and not represent those that are robbing you. You must have judges that have more respect for a million men than for a million dollars.

The right kind of judges will put those men that are above the law on a level with all other citizens. And those judges you MUST have, if you intend to prevent continued wholesale robbery of the entire country by a licensed few.

In Massachusetts the people have not even the privilege of voting for their own judges. The men who have the power to set aside laws passed by the Legislature are appointed by the Governor.

Charles S. Mellen of Connecticut, who represents the men who own the biggest and worst trust in the United States, and who is trying to establish a complete railroad monopoly in New England, that will control all the other trusts and all the workingmen and business men, big and little, says that if he had a vote in Massachusetts he would vote this Fall for Curtis Guild. Mr. Mellen, of course, knows that Mr. Guild will help him establish his Railroad Trust. He would not favor Mr. Guild if he were not satisfied that the judges appointed by Mr. Guild would be the kind of judges that the Railroad Trust wants.

Mr. Mellen is also very friendly to Henry M. Whitney, who transferred twenty-seven thousand shares of Boston & Maine stock to the New Haven road, and thereby helped Mr. Mellen bring about the merger.

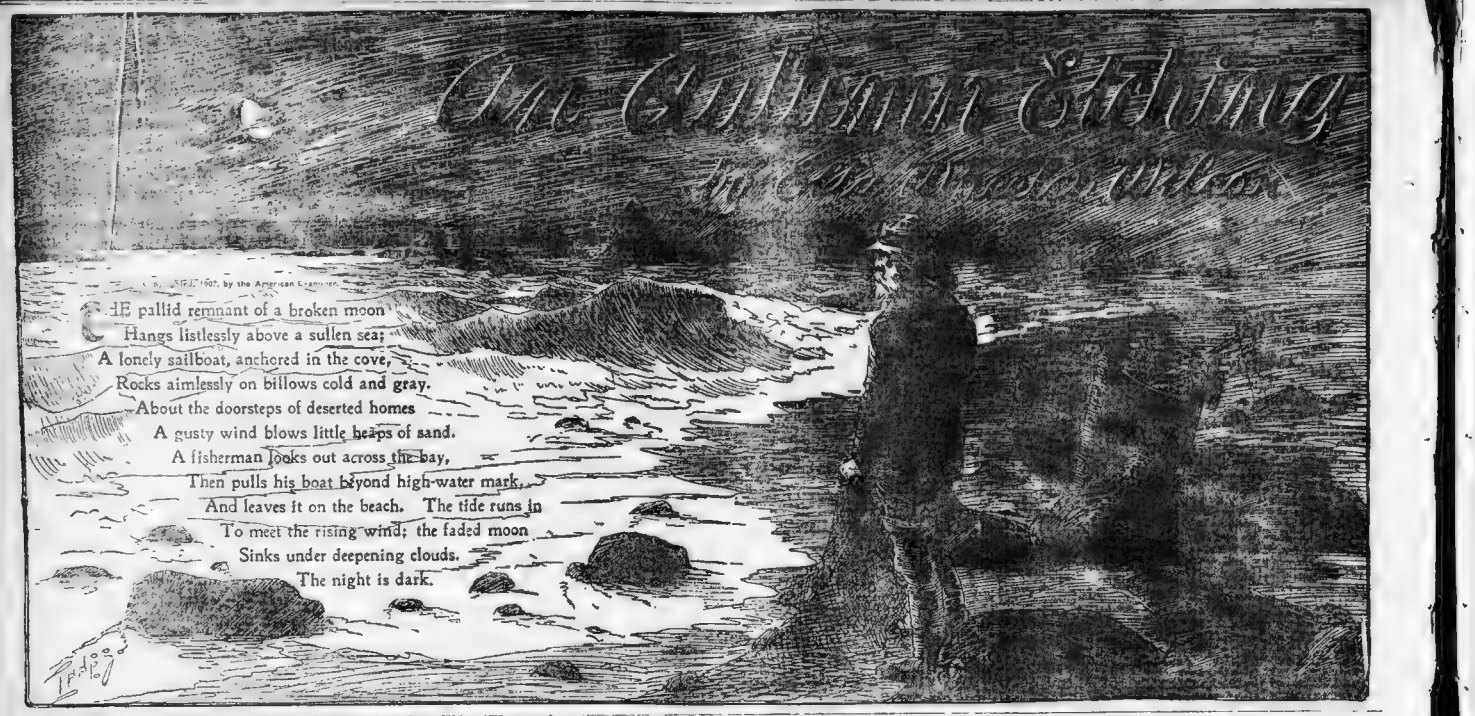
Mr. Whitney has paid hundreds of thousands of dollars to lobbyists in order to get just such bills through the Legislature as will be necessary now in order to LEGALIZE this Railroad Trust that now threatens New England. He has been openly and repeatedly accused of the worst forms of political and legislative corruption. He has never answered these charges.

If Mr. Whitney is elected Governor of Massachusetts HE, WHITNEY, will appoint the judges. Even if the Legislature should pass a law prohibiting the formation of a Railroad Trust, these judges appointed by Henry M. Whitney would have the power to veto that law.

Mr. Mellen, in a letter published recently in this newspaper, has said, in effect, that he would be glad to see EITHER Mr. Guild or Mr. Whitney elected Governor, although he favors Guild.

Either Guild or Whitney, if elected, will not only appoint judges, but will also appoint Railroad Commissioners, who have the powers of judges, AND WHO WILL PASS UPON ALL RAILROAD LEGISLATION.

If the people of this State do not want judges and railroad commissioners who are committed in advance to the Railroad Trust, they will have to look this year for candidates OUTSIDE of the two old parties.



A Paradox of Science ❧ By Prof. Garrett P. Serviss

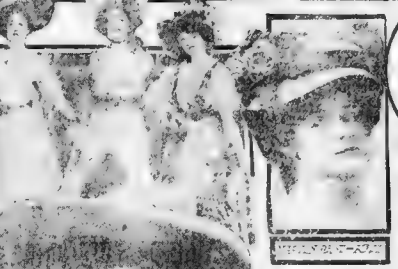
WHAT is the [illegible] existence [illegible] that impress our [illegible] extremely dense and solid. The [illegible], as recently given by Sir Oliver Lodge is amazing beyond belief. The soldest thing in existence, he avers, is the very thing which for generations has been universally regarded as the lightest, the most imperceptible, the most utterly tenuous and evanescent beyond all definition or computation—the ether.

The ether is supposed to pervade everything, to be everywhere, to penetrate all objects, to extend throughout all space. The earth moves through it and it through the earth; the sun and all the stars have their being and their motions in and through the ether; it carries [illegible] all forms of radiant [illegible]. Nobody has ever seen it or rendered it [illegible] any other sense. [illegible] feel it, to weigh it, to subject it to any of scientific experiment. It [illegible] in mechanics. It neither adds to nor takes away from the width of [illegible] known matter. And yet [illegible] assured by some of the highest authorities of [illegible] that it is [illegible] thousand million times more dense than platinum, one of the densest metals known.

When the ordinary reader peruses such statements he cannot be blamed if he exclaims: "Away with such nonsense! Am I to be asked to throw overboard the evidence of my senses? You might as well tell me that if I dash my head against a stone wall I shall feel no shock, or that if I strike my fist against the air I shall shatter my bones.

But this is exactly what science does ask us to do. It tells us not to trust our senses at all if we wish to penetrate the greatest secrets of Nature. It affirms that the senses are most pertinent deceivers. Matter [illegible] disobey. Beyond it lies a settled [illegible] which believes [illegible] the only real [illegible] ether. [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] ether [illegible] and [illegible] ether [illegible] and [illegible] ether

HALLOWEEN WEEK AT THE THEATRES



THERE are quite a number of changes in the theatrical list this week. To the Majestic comes a new musical comedy with real comedians in it; to the Hollis comes an old favorite in a new play; to the Globe comes another new play, while at the Grand Opera House is another of those thrillers that South End patrons love so well. "Faust" will be played at two houses this week, operatically at the Castle Square and dramatically at the Bowdoin Square. The vaudeville houses are getting their big guns ready for action, and it looks as though the week ought to be a busy and an interesting one.

WHAT THE THEATRES OFFER

Majestic Theatre

"The Lady from Lackey" comes to the Majestic to-morrow night and remains for a fortnight, with the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees. This new comedy by George Broadhurst and Gus Sayer Kerlor, is modern in all respects. Will M. Thomas Wise and Truly Shattuck in the principal comedy roles, laughter is the key note of the entertainment. Upon Monday Miss Hattie Barker will make her [illegible] in this city. Miss Barker is [illegible] Miss Mary Boland, Miss Ruth Benton, Mr. Arthur Byron, Mr. Frank Smith, Walter Baldwin and Jack Sheehan. There is a stage chorus of girls who can sing and dance. Scenically, it is to be said, there is a new era in the feminine world. The company going to this city after a long run at the New York theatre. "The Lady from Lackey" is to wine extra interest for Tom Wise in Mr. Wise is one of Mr. Hoyt's favorite earlier farces.

Hollis Street Theatre

Charles Frohman will present his new star, Mr. Lustin Farnum, at the Hollis to-morrow night for two weeks in the big American play by Augustus Thomas, entitled, "The Ranger." Mr. Farnum is an actor who became a great favorite with the American theatre-goers by his realistic portrayal of the principal roles in "Arizona," another of Mr. Thomas' plays, and in "The Virginian," in which he scored quite by the same method. Mr. Farnum is said to be of the [illegible] of seeing [illegible] in the [illegible] engagement at Wallack's theatre, New York, Frohman that as Captain Farnum, Mr. Farnum has a role admirably suited to his requirements as an actor. The hero is an honest, fearless, [illegible] being leader of men. The play has been beautifully mounted, and the shooting and [illegible] effects are said to be superb. Mr. Frohman has assembled a remarkably capable company, among whom is Miss Mary Boland, who is now [illegible] seen here as the [illegible] with Wm. Rogers Kilgore in "Sunshine."

Globe Theatre

"The Spoilers," by Rex E. Beach and James MacArthur will be seen for the first time in this city at the Globe Theatre for one week only, beginning with a matinee to-morrow. The scenes are laid in Nome during the early rush for gold and the story deals with the efforts of a powerful political ring to obtain possession of the Midas Mine, which is supposed to be the richest gold mine in Alaska. The company consists of seventy-five people and the scenic effects are gorgeous. Much attention is paid to the incidental music. Matinees on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday will be given.

Castle Square Theatre

[illegible] at the Castle Square Theatre [illegible] again and began as it was in the beginning, with [illegible] its gem and [illegible] never grow old, and its story of love, despair and sanctification are as fresh to-day as they were fifty years ago. There will be beautiful scenery at the Castle Square to give added attraction to the opera, and the [illegible] and chorus will [illegible] Madame Bertha Kalisch will be seen Monday night, and will alternate each week with Miss Carey for the [illegible] Marguerite. [illegible] will be [illegible] Miss Carey and Mr. Meyers [illegible] Hattie Belle's Ladd as Martha, and Leslie as Baron as Nelson, while the romantic part of Valentine will be sung by J. E. Murray and Forrest Huff. The run of "Faust" is limited to one week.

Tremont Theatre

The Romany Operatic Company of seven teen persons heads the bill at the Tremont in a scenic and singing novelty entitled "Miss Electricity From the Moon." Musical selections [illegible] Vincilla [illegible] Vincilla's leading attraction. Nat Burt, in "The Unfortunate of the Family," George W. Day, Charles H. Sweet, Harry Carson Clarke and company, and Charles Kenna provide the humor in the bill. The big English pantomime on "The London Fire Brigade" will be retained, and among the newcomers will be May Belfort, comedienne; Delmore and Lee, acrobats just back from Berlin, and Mabel Hoyt's remarkable dog and cat act. There are matinees every day at the Tremont.

Keith's Theatre

Seldom, if ever, has any vaudeville act made so great a hit as that scored by "The Song Birds" Victor Herbert and George V. Hobart evidently built better than they knew when they wrote this delightful little operatic travesty. William Hurrese' playing of the role of "Oscar," if impersonator" is a [illegible] character acting that is [illegible]. This affords [illegible] opportunities of using the [illegible] [illegible] and Piano are [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

In the following article she tells how everybody can be well and strong from childhood to old age.

By Mlle. Charmion.

THOUSANDS of persons in all parts have asked me how I attained my strength, and how I exercise whether I followed any special directions I would answer, and I am prompted to write a few simple ideas how the most can be attained without injury but by a natural method of living life by taking a few minutes exercise. I am happy to be able to say.

Always dress as quickly as possible. Never be afraid of the cold. Never be afraid of the cold. Never be afraid of the cold

SOCIETY NOW PLANNING BRILLIANT SEASON FOR BRIDES AND DEBUTANTES

Miss Isabel Lawrence Weds George de Gersdorff of New York at Brilliant Wedding This Week.

By a Society Woman.

A THRILL . . . and flashing in the shadows cast by evening lamps . . . and the blood is sanguine. It is going to be a busy season . . . into the gaieties of smart functions.

Fashionable weddings and plans for debutante festivities are being . . . back to town the last lingering lovers of the country. Fashion's . . . was astir . . . and . . . deed will be those who keep up the brilliant procession.

Lawrence Choate Bridal Ceremony

. . . ston's only beauty . . . Miss Isabel Lawrence, . . . of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Choate Lawrence of Dartmouth street, . . . wedding on Wednesday afternoon . . . de Gersdorff, of New York, will be . . . the events of the season. It will take place in the pretty little Church of Our Saviour at . . . and will be followed by a reception at the country estate of the bride's parents in . . .

Miss Lawrence, who is petite in figure . . . coloring between . . . and chatelaine, will make the . . . of honor. She is as clever as . . . as pretty and ever since she joined the Kindergarten club has designed the . . . number of the costumes worn at their annual show. The prospective groom is a well-known New Yorker . . . and a nephew of the Hon. Joseph H. Choate, formerly United States ambassador to Great Britain.

Boston Groom at New York Wedding

Wednesday is also the wedding day of Ralph Miller Johnson of Marlborough, and Miss Marie Antoinette Davis, of New York. The ceremony will take place at the Church of the Incarnation and a number of Bostonians will go over for the occasion early in the week. The bride has chosen for her attendants two extremely pretty young matrons of the smart New York coterie, Mrs. John Stephens and Mrs. Henry Kipp. Commander William Pratt, U. S. N., who married Mr. Johnson's only sister, will be best man and Alexander Whiteside and Valentine . . . classmates of Mr. Johnson at Harvard, will represent . . . ushers.

Church Nuptial at Jamaica Plain

An important wedding in Jamaica Plain next Saturday will be that of Miss Helen Mitchell Johnson, daughter of Mrs. Theodore Winthrop Johnson and Harold Wesson son of Mr. . . . Frank L. Wesson, of Springfield Mass. Mr. Wesson now lives in Philadelphia where he is prominently identified with the Markham, Hunnington valley and Racquet Clubs.

The ceremony will take place at four o'clock in the Unitarian Church and will be solemnized by the Rev. Charles F. Dole. A reception will follow at the Horace Chandler residence on Forest Hill street.

Postpone Bow in Society

Keen disappointment was felt in the bud set when it was whispered about last week that two of the handsomest and most popular of their number were not to be presented this year. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bradlee who announced their daughter, Rosamund, last Winter, at a brilliant Somerset ball, had intended until a few days ago to present their younger daughter, Leslie, this Winter, but have decided to spend the Winter in Paris, where the winsome young girl will study and prepare herself for a brilliant debut next year.

Mrs. Washington B. Thomas has also withdrawn her daughter Margarete's name from the list and she, too will wait another year. Her sister, Helen, was represented last year and was quite the most beautiful bud in the whole bouquet. She made her initial bow at a ball given for her at the Somerset and after a Winter of teas, dances and dinners, went abroad with her parents and younger sister for a two-months' automobile tour.

Four Pretty Buds-to-Be

Four new names have been added to the list of buds-to-be, all girls of fine social standing and much personal charm. Miss Marian Shaw, daughter of Francis Shaw, who has purchased the Prince house on Beacon street will be quite the smart debutante of 1908, who is at present . . . traveling abroad, where all the dainty finery for her season is being selected, and will return early next month. She is of the pretty blonde type with the most winsome manner and charming personality.

Mrs. Albert Nickerson has also decided to present her young daughter and her welcome into the social arena promises to be most brilliant. She has any number of relatives waiting to do her honor and the festivities being planned by them are almost innumerable.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sturgis Grew of . . . street will present their daughter Margaret probably at a bill at the Somerset late in November. Like her sister, Rebecca, who came out . . . Newport . . . ago, she is vivacious and . . . lovely sister's close second in point of good looks.

. . . Alice DePord, of Brookline, is still another who has been added to the . . . list. She is a beautiful blonde, with fine . . . and exceeding good style. She is athletic and like Miss Sears adopts the . . . style in . . .

Season's First Debutante Ball

. . . first . . . of the season will be given November first by . . . Miss . . . at her home on . . . street. The ball will be followed . . . by one on November . . . by Mrs. Peabody for Miss Bird and . . . Miss Mary Wales, at the Hotel Touraine. Mrs. . . . and Miss Read Inman will . . . on Beacon street, for the Winter and hospitalities for . . . Miss . . . Miss Inman and Miss . . . are all . . . debutantes for this . . . which promises much brilliancy. In the absence . . . which Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer is giving at her Lancaster estate, Nonesuch, for the pretty blonde daughters, Miss Nora and Evelyn Thayer, . . . the pretty blonde daughters of the John Thayers

GAY "DIANAS OF THE CHASE" IN MANNISH HUNTING GARB, PLUNGE INTO MAD GALLOP

Dashing Eleanor Sears Leads the Way for Daring Ride of Society Girls.

Booted, . . . and . . . the men," several of the most . . . of Boston's society girls have joined in a . . . merry "hunting" . . . At odd . . . they . . . the . . . vet more man has not been admitted to . . . the club, which with its gay riders in the . . . heat of health and high spirits, holds its . . . daily runs over remote country routes, far . . . from the eyes of the curious. And such a . . . picturesque . . . as the rollicking group presents . . . with each fair member arrayed in the . . . strictest masculine hunting toggery from the . . . cap on her pretty head to the tip of the . . . ridiculously heavy and well spurred boot. . . .

The zeal of society approval has been accorded upon this newest fashion from Paris, which . . . has been generously adopted in England . . . and prophets say it won't be long before . . . the delightfully mannish attire will be . . . adopted by all modern "Dianas of the chase."

Mrs. Frank Morrison of Commonwealth avenue is a prominent hostess who will be much missed in society the coming season, as she has sailed for Egypt to spend the Winter there.

Miss Mary Rhoda Amee of Dartmouth street will remain at her North Easton estate until after Christmas.

Mrs. Edward Brandegee was among the hostesses of the past week, her hospitality taking the form of a small dinner party at her Brookline residence Saturday evening.

Mrs. James Mercer Howe gave one of her delightful teas of the season for her daughter, Miss Barbara Howe, on Wednesday. Miss Howe, who is among the most attractive of this year's group of debs, was pretty gowned in white and as it was accompanied by flowers sent by her admirers following suit, and it didn't take long to . . . that it was the only way to . . . Miss Foley was one of the pretty girls who assisted Mrs. Howe in receiving. . . .

LABOR DECLARES WAR ON BABY-HATING LANDLORDS

"Save the Children," Cry Leaders, Who Plan Appeal to Legislature in Battle for the Home.

DID you know that Massachusetts babies had no chance?

Did you know that landlords want to exclude from their tenements the families where there are several happy children growing up to young manhood and young womanhood?

If you don't know it you are not a father, neither are you the mother of some half dozen sturdy specimens of youth.

That is, unless you are blessed with enough of the world's goods to be able to own your own house and to [illegible] fiances to landlords who applaud Theodore Roosevelt for his race suicide views and then [illegible] people's income [illegible]

It has come to [illegible] mothers [illegible] in which just [illegible] without opposition from the [illegible] ers. It might [illegible] make such a statement, but there are those who will prove it to be true.

Labor Registers Protest.

A labor convention was held in Mi[illegible] not long ago, and the delegates there who were not fathers were pledged to settle a bit when a resolution was introduced which read [illegible]

"Whereas, [illegible] to the deter[illegible] efforts of property owners in the N[illegible] to exclude children from [illegible] hiring on the part of [illegible]

"Whereas, this objection to renting tenements to persons with children, [illegible] only seems to be an injustice, but in many cases works as a hardship by depriving honest men and women of an opportunity to bring up their children in a healthful and moral [illegible] atmosphere, and [illegible] not checked, will tend to increase race suicide [illegible]

"Therefore, That the executive council be [illegible] instructed to [illegible] in the legislature [illegible] come [illegible] to bring about a change in [illegible] of affairs in Massachusetts [illegible]

That is what [illegible] men of the State, hard workers, farmers of families, thought necessary to the welfare of the children of the State. Most of them knew by experience that corners of houses in a locality most desirable for children to spend the early years of their lives refused to rent them to those burdened with more than one or two.

War on "Unfair" Landlords.

That number could come in, yes, of course. But five or six or more—never! The neighborhood wouldn't stand for it. It generally happened that in the block were a few married people who didn't have children, didn't want any and could not see any use in children anyway.

Cheerful allusion for the father and the mother reigning in their own happiness on being the heads of a fine collection of youngsters, wasn't it!

However, at the last convention of the American Federation of Labor, Ernest H. Crosier and Isaac A. D. Jelley, who have families and know well how hurtful by means, spoke to the delegates in such a manner that even the lukewarm got up and took notice. As a result of what Driscoll and Crosier told the delegates, the measure was passed and this year will see a [illegible]

[illegible] movement against landlords who are [illegible] a persecution [illegible] and [illegible] ering [illegible] which will be [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Strong on "To Let" Signs.

GREAT CROWD CHEERS AS HISGEN SHOWS HOW TRUSTS ROB PEOPLE

Present Famine Prices Due to Reign of Monopoly Permitted by the Two Old Parties, He Declares at Clinton.

GUILD AND WHITNEY STAND FOR EXTORTION

They Approve the Merger Which Means Another Trust and Still Higher Prices for Every Necessity Used in Every Massachusetts Home.

CLINTON, Oct. 26.—"Everything that goes onto your tables and upon your backs," Thomas L. Hisgen said at Clinton to-night, "is extremely high in price because you have maintained the Republican party in supreme power. It is true that you have had only Hobson's choice. Your only alternative was the Democratic party. But times have changed."

Mr. Hisgen talked higher prices at Clinton to-night—talked the increased cost of living so plainly and so earnestly that from the beginning to the end of a thirty-minute discourse he held the closest attention of an audience that completely filled Clinton's town hall.

The Independence League candidate for Governor placed the responsibility for existing conditions squarely upon the people. Curtis Guild, Jr., he said, had been their choice for Governor. Behind Curtis Guild he pointed out the figure of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Republican boss of Massachusetts and "handy man" for the "big interests."

WHY MELLEN FAVORS GUILD.

"The present administration in this State," he said, "is a corporation administration. Guild is controlled by Lodge. Behind Lodge are the Trusts.

"Did you ever know Curtis Guild to strike a blow at a single Trust? If you have, I should like to be reminded of the blow and the particular Trust affected.

"Guild favors the merger, and Mellen favors Guild."

E. Gerry Brown, the Independence League candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, was unable to speak. Illness is the reason why he failed to meet his engagement. Mr. Brown is suffering from a severe cold and by command of his physician is remaining at home to recuperate for the last week of the campaign.

The success of to-night's rally was in many ways a personal triumph for Thomas E. Finnerty of Clinton, League candidate for State Auditor. Mr. Finnerty's home town turned out in a way that must have made his modest heart proud. The streets were black with people to see the visitors. Long before 8 o'clock the voters began to assemble in the hall for a choice of seats.

All along the line to the hall the visitors were cheered enthusiastically. Repeatedly there were cries of "Hisgen! Hisgen! Hisgen!"

"MONOPOLISTS CONTROL NECESSARIES"—HISGEN

Mr. Hisgen said:

"I want to talk to you a few minutes, my friends, in a heart to heart manner. There is no use of trying to fool the voters this year with the impression that there are issues before us that the ordinary man cannot understand. The issues are as simple as a. b. c. Not only the man with ordinary intelligence can understand the situation, but the women in our homes do understand it.

"It does not take a superior mind to understand the famine prices that we are being compelled to pay to-day for the necessities of life. Talk to

MAYOR WOULD TAMMANYIZE CITY TO CRUSH MORAN.

Plans Laid at Secret Meeting of Leaders to Force Laborers to Canvass Entire City.

GIGANTIC TASK FOR 13,000

Desperate Scheme to Encompass Defeat of District Attorney at Expense of Ticket.

SWING VOTES TO WEBSTER

Would Use City Employes to Find Out Exact Strength of District Attorney in City.

BY an elaborately conceived plan of "Tammanyizing" Boston, rivaled in its scope only by New York's notorious Democratic organization, but surpassing it in boldness, involving as it does the use of Boston's army of 13,000 municipal employes, Mayor John F. Fitzgerald has planned to destroy District Attorney John B. Moran.

The plan involves the securing of the preference for District-Attorney of every one of Boston's 110,000 registered voters.

Under penalty of suffering the loss of their municipal positions the city employes, acting under orders from the heads of their departments, have been ordered to do the canvassing. The "Tammanyizing" of the city will commence to-morrow night when the city employes have been ordered to report for duty in the eleven ward committee rooms of chairman of their various wards at the ward committee rooms throughout the city.

Discipline if They Refuse.

"If the men do not report for duty notify President William F. McCarthy of the eleven-ward city committee himself at once; he will report them to their superiors and they will be brought to accountability, in the order which came from City Hall.

The "Tammany action" is provided by an elaborate card system. The cards will be issued by the caucusers and by them turned over to the ward committee chairmen, who will compile the data secured in books provided by the city committee. The books must be turned over, filled in to President William F. McCarthy at the Democratic city committee headquarters not later than 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

Saving Votes to Webster.

One of the leading ward committee chairmen of the city said last night to a Boston American reporter that there was but one conclusion to be reached from this precipitate activity on the part of Mayor Fitzgerald to know the exact situation in the District Attorney contest. His contention was that Mayor Fitzgerald could not know in the canvass turns out to be unfavorable to Dennis, as seems a foregone conclusion to the minds of many of the leaders, just how much of an effort will be required to turn Democratic votes at the last moment from Dennis to Webster to insure Moran's defeat.

What else could these leaders conclude to be the purpose of the extraordinary movement organization work. It would have been started long ago.

The daring and elaborate scheme is the product of the fertile mind of the agile chief magistrate of the city, Lincoln Mayor John Fitzgerald.

It was launched by him at a meeting at 6 o'clock last Thursday afternoon at a waterside dining room at the Quincy House. Recognizing the inevitable result should unfavorable action be given the plan, the meeting [illegible] has not responded [illegible]

Balloons Had Narrow Escape From Crash In International Race

Britishh Aeronaut in Boston Tells How Disaster High in Air Was Averted.

Griffith Brewer, the English aeronaut who took part in the recent international air race from St. Louis in the balloon "Lotus," for the British Aero Club, as the guest of Charles J. Glidden at the Hotel Touraine. Mr. Brewer tells of a narrow escape from collision high in the air between his balloon and the French balloon "France."

Some time after we had started we sighted a balloon rapidly rising and coming very close to us, said Mr. Brewer. Quick action prevented a collision for we were forced to throw out ballast in order to avoid the balloon below. As it was the balloon passed us not fifty feet away."

Mr. Brewer said that he was compelled to drop out of the race by reason of sickness aggravated by exposure. His assistant was Lieutenant the Hon. Colin Brabazon, of London. Mr. Brewer will leave for home next Tuesday, sailing from New York.

SENATOR DONOVAN FOUGHT BY UNIONS

Lawrence, Oct. 26.—Senator Joseph Donovan, who, both in the committee on judiciary and on the floor of the Senate, was the leader for the United Shoe Machinery Company in the efforts of that company to defeat the Leased Machinery Bill, is being opposed for election by the machinists and iron moulders of this district.

The machinists have already passed resolutions condemning Senator Donovan for his many attempts to defeat labor legislation and this week the iron moulders have passed resolutions against the senator's course also.

The machinists have issued a statement giving the record of Senator Donovan on important bills affecting the rights of members of the Fifth Essex district. The district is largely made up of workers in mills and shops. Here is the record, prepared by Lincoln Lodge of Machinists, No. 322.

Donovan's Record.

May 23—Voted against the bill known as the Anti-Monopoly Bill, to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraint and control.

June 4—Voted against the Conference Committee to consider the Anti-Monopoly Bill.

May 14—Voted against the bill to regulate the issue and sale of stocks and bonds by railroad corporations known as the Lowell bill.

May 21—Voted against the bill to prohibit the employment of labor on United States buildings by contract labor.

May 28—Voted against the bill to prohibit direct nominations of Senators and Representatives.

June 6—Absent on the bill to provide that Street Railway Companies must equip cars with suitable fenders.

June 6—Voted against the reconsideration of rejection of above bill.

Thus every time the roll calls on labor bills for a year, Senator Donovan was not recorded at any time on these bills.

Senator Donovan is opposed by Harry Representative Dennis K. Hailey [illegible] served two years in the Common Council and has two creditable years of service to his credit in the Legislature.

LEAGUE IS THE ONE PARTY NOT OWNED BY CORPORATION

William N. Osgood Replies to Attack Made by a Newspaper Writer.

"Political party" shall apply to a party which at the preceding annual State election polled for Governor at least 3 per cent of the entire vote cast in the Commonwealth for that office.—General Laws of Massachusetts, Chapter 50, Part 1, Section 1.

How William N. Osgood, candidate for Attorney General on the Independence League ticket, exposed last night a newspaper on the Independence League, in which it was asserted that the League is a "corporation."

The League and Mr. Osgood is not a corporation, nor is it nor he a political party.

If the Independence League as a new political organization is not a party, should not the Boston & Maine Railroad, a place upon which Mr. Osgood seek a place upon, likewise be called a political organization by a newspaper? If a board of directors there is a board of people as large for the affairs of a political party.

Amazed at the Attack.

"I cannot account for the attack," Mr. Osgood said, at the close of the meeting in Tremont building, except that the Democratic organization was in the absence of any greatly needed issue, and the progress of the Hisgen movement in this state and the utter rout of the Republican organization, was in the absence of any other issue, forced to attack the Independence League.

"I am amazed that a reputable newspaper should allow itself to be used as a medium to convey to the people of Massachusetts the false impression that the Independence League was at hand in the interest of the Democratic party. It is ridiculous. Many of the men on the ticket with me have been life long Republicans, and I have been a Republican myself. I have always been a Republican, and I always shall be a Republican. To place this organization before the people by means of such an article in newspapers which I have always known to be published openly and avowedly as a Democratic organ, is a piece of impudence which I cannot understand.

Real Significance of Names.

Would form a true State a few of the names on the Independence League ticket. There is Osgood, Democrat, from the Democratic ranks of Boston; Hall, Democrat, from the Democratic ranks of Boston; Bird, Democrat, from the Democratic ranks of Boston; Bird, Democrat, from the Democratic ranks of Boston; Bird

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Thousands of Men and Women Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

Nature warns you when the track of health is not clear. Kidney and bladder trouble compel you to pass water often through the day and get up many times during the night.

Unhealthy kidneys cause backache, rheumatism, nervousness, headaches, indigestion, dizziness, heart trouble, sleeplessness, bad blood, poor complexion, sometimes bad breath, lame joints, gravel, Bright's disease, diabetes, loss of flesh, and you may have pain in passing water, or have to pass it often during the day and get up many times during the night.

If your water, when allowed to settle, forms a sediment or has a cloudy appearance, it is a sure indication that your kidneys need immediate attention.

Josephine Quinlan Joins the College Widow Company Playing in South.

Miss Josephine Quinlan, who has long been a leading member of St. Peter's Catholic Dramatic Society of Dorchester, left Boston last evening to join the College Widow company, now playing in the South. Miss Quinlan is a sister of Miss Marie Quinlan, who has been playing with the Boston Dramatic Stock company for several years past. Josephine Quinlan made her first appearance on the stage in Dorchester a few months ago in the play "Lena Rivers," and her success was such that she was induced to go on the road. Miss Quinlan is a graduate of the Dorchester high school, and is a member of the Dorchester Catholic Women's Club. Her parents reside at 20 Ashmont street, Dorchester.

MAKES RECORD RUN FROM MAINE COAST

NORWORTH DENIES HE IS SEEKING DIVORCE

Matinee Idol Declares There's Nothing to Trixie Friganza Report.

Pittsburg, Oct. 26.—Jack Norworth, who is playing a week's engagement at the Grand Opera House, was seen today, and flatly denied that there was any trouble between him and his wife, Trixie Friganza. Mr. Norworth said: "Reports have been circulated to the effect that I am seeking a divorce from my wife, but there is not a word of truth in them. We have been married for seven years, and have never had a quarrel. Miss Friganza is now in Boston, and I have received letters from her every day. She will join me here next week."

250 MILLION FEET OF LOGS FOR PAPER

Bangor, Oct. 26.—Two hundred and fifty million feet of logs will be cut on the Penobscot river and its tributaries this winter, and a good many more than that number will be required to keep the mills busy. Today's Bangor Commercial says: "Never before has there been such a concentration of lumbermen and woodsmen in this city as there was in the past week with the opening of the big woods season."

CROSSES SEAS FOR RECORD WEDDING

Pretty Mill Girl, in America but 24-Hours, Rushed Through 46-Second Ceremony.

An American girl twenty-four hours and rushed from the Cunard docks in Boston to Revere, where she became the first to engage in the proud annual record of pretty Alice Proctor, English mill girl who came here on the Saxonia Friday, slipped up to Lynn Thomas Singleton of New Bedford. They were sweethearts in Old England once. He came to the new world and finally possessed and sent for her money. Once here, where they would be wedded, they came and set the pace awaiting the wedding stood Singleton.

As young Englishman had met the girl on the ship. He called for the marriage license. It was prepared and the two set off to make the knot hard right away.

Where your mate no license? Some demand of the clergyman.

Neglected and forgotten to provide such a thing. Cupid had accidentally taken one and I ask of the pastor if he could perform the marriage then, without the license. He was prepared and the couple left to be married at once.

Here's your mate no license? Some one said to Singleton, who got to the door to listen.

Then Lover Cupid Beckoned they left again, rushed into the drug store of Joseph Anthony, who wed the happy pair. He is just forty-six seconds.

SAVE FOUR FROM DEATH IN FLAMES

Cripple and Woman with Tiny Infant Rescued from Blazing Lynn Tenements.

Lynn, Oct. 26.—Three firemen were hurt and four persons were rescued from fire which partially destroyed the three-story wooden house at No. 124 Commercial street late tonight.

Mrs. Catherine Lyman, fifty-five years old, a boarder, Edward Montrose, a one-legged man, were rescued in an exhausted condition. When the firemen arrived, dense smoke was already started out of a window on the second floor. Several firemen had to fight up the stairs, for before they reached the second floor, George W. Wessels, a salesman, Edward Ward and Mrs. Lyman were overcome by smoke, and carried down to the street. Frederick Lafferty, one of the firemen, who was nearly suffocated, carried 120 pounds down two flights of stairs in his arms.

On the second floor was Mrs. Jennie J. Holmes, who had succeeded in getting herself out two days old baby. Fireman Arthur Barker carried her side to Lynn, and got her and the baby out safely. She was in a very weak condition when removed to a neighbor's house.

Patrick Kelly, who had saved Montrose, was later struck and cut by falling glass. A ladder was raised to the third story, from which Fireman Lafferty carried down Mrs. Lyman and Edward Ward.

JANITOR-NOVELIST TELLS THRILLING STORY OF IRISH HEROISM.

How a Critic's Sneer Spurred South Boston Man to Literary Achievement.

INTEREST OF HOME RULE

"Misty of Rathgin" Reflects the Life of Its Author, James Riley.

With [illegible] he works hard all day as janitor in the South Boston police station, James Riley found time at nights to write a story which is strictly exciting for him a man and a position strangely different from that which he has held for years.

A sound, fresh nerve and Irish pluck [illegible] response to Joe Riley's success, [illegible] as an unusually well equipped [illegible] for Janitor Riley is really a remarkable man.

"I can't write," is substantially what [illegible] publisher's critic told Mr. [illegible] three months ago.

[illegible] I, narrated Riley to himself [illegible] prove it to you and to the rest of the [illegible] that I can," said he has done so, [illegible] "Misty of Rathgin," a tale of Irish [illegible] entertaining, and, in places, thrilling.

The story, to be followed by others [illegible] was [illegible] prepared with [illegible] the janitor at lights at [illegible] No. 11 Tufts Park street, [illegible] three months, but [illegible] stories would find no sale at the [illegible] [illegible] working and doing anything [illegible] world of literature.

"I Was Mad Clear Through."

The man made me mad, mad clear [illegible] said Mr. Riley, telling of the [illegible] start he got as a writer. "I had [illegible] him and asked him if I could [illegible] a look for his publishing house. [illegible] but that I felt that I could [illegible] Riley," he said to me in a jeering way, "I have just seen parties who [illegible] to see me every day in the week and I can't see you. Don't think that [illegible] you are, you're no better nor worse [illegible]."

[illegible] words that started me [illegible] and every strength. That [illegible] I read a letter from [illegible] of Washington, owner of [illegible] asking for [illegible] Mr. [illegible] Riley, he said, was a rising writer. "I have just seen parties who [illegible] to see me every day in the week and I can't see you. Don't think that you are, you're no better nor worse [illegible]."

[illegible] reader can follow James Riley himself [illegible] of Irish history, [illegible] the famous Hill of Tara, called [illegible] the story. Here [illegible] of Oliver Goldsmith, where he [illegible] and the old mill where [illegible] barred gates and peasants and [illegible] who could do and trouble [illegible] but of hand building [illegible] by the tenants own labor, and then [illegible] house mother, a little child, and [illegible] dwelling into the snow [illegible] blizzard. Without [illegible] Christy, Mr. Riley was the only [illegible] the day he was just [illegible] ded with his mother from the ship [illegible] August 15, 1854. They had been [illegible] by Mr. Riley's uncle, who, how[illegible] after their landing, was found [illegible] to offer them a home two days and, [illegible] the boy and his mother wandered [illegible] through Maine and Massachusetts, [illegible] to find a place where a housekeeper [illegible] work and live with her child. At [illegible] they settled in Middleboro, Mass., [illegible] Mrs. Riley beginning for many years [illegible] Captain Earl Sproat, while the boy [illegible], then seven years old, went to live [illegible] it was expressed within a former [illegible] nearby.

Friend of Boyle O'Reilly.

"Those," says Mr. Riley, "were the bright days for me. I did love books so much! I was not what you would call a very smart scholar, except in reading, for I was in the first reader class at eight years of age." But though not a savoy scholar, Mr. Riley was at least a thorough one in whatever he took up. He lived with his farmer for nine years, and since Captain Sproat had taken an especial liking to him, he was allowed the privilege of spending as many hours as possible in the captain's library, which was a large one for those days. The Sproat sons were also sent to Bates college during those years, and Riley was free to use their textbooks if he wished whenever they were at the homeboard. This gave him some sound acquaintance with the present, and he came to Boston to live when he was thirty-three years old.

He was married at twenty-nine years of age, but his wife died during the first year of marriage, and Mr. Riley has remained a widower ever since. John Boyle O'Reilly was one of his friends, [illegible] H. Hurd, literary editor of the Boston Herald for over thirty years, advised Mr. Riley in the art of writing for publication, and was his friend while he [illegible] edited the two Catholic periodicals, [illegible] Herald and "The Week's Bouquet."

Mr. Riley has worked at the South Boston postoffice for five years, but "Christy of Ellington," as well as his little volume of Irish poems, "Songs of Two Peoples," [illegible] from various publications, [illegible] they had first appeared, and published a few years ago, show his literary [illegible]. He is now working on another story with Irish setting.

LABORER BECOMES AN AUTHOR.

HOSPITAL ROMANCE IS ENDED BY DEATH

"The knowledge that you are my wife will give me courage to bear up. Become my wife and I will pull through," was the plea that Edward P. Albee made of Miss Jennie Sawyer [illegible] doctors at the City Hospital [illegible] that he would pull through an operation that would probably be fatal. They were married, but Miss Sawyer's "pull through." He died that night.

It was the end of a romance of old age. Both the principals [illegible] of fighting on the shady side of [illegible] Albee was sixty-three. They had been [illegible] for a long time. Death freed [illegible] lodger [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] Hartford No. 20 Montmorency st.

The Rev. Hiram [illegible] Weston, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, Tremont and West Canton [illegible] was sent for, and he married them. A [illegible] on the very bed where he was to end his life [illegible] and doctors were witnesses.

The day after the ceremony, Oct. 2, the operation was performed. Albee rallied [illegible] the wound [illegible] fatal [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

DENNISON, WEBSTER AND MAYOR FLAYED BY MORAN IN HIS REPLY TO LODGE

Personal Friends Unfit for Office," Declares District Attorney in Letter.

SEES GRAFTERS AT WORK

Declares Both Candidates Are Susceptible to Influence of Fitzgerald.

OUTLINES OWN POSITION

Marks Dare at Senator to Bolt Party's Unfit Nomination.

LATE last night John B. Moran Independence League candidate for District Attorney, issued the following statement commenting on Senator Henry Cabot Lodge's remarks at the Langham Hotel:

"Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge:

"Dear Senator—Your words of commendation of me spoken at the Langham Hotel Republican rally Thursday evening, are duly appreciated.

"You might have further truthfully said that the office of District Attorney should be kept out of politics and out of the control of either the Democratic or Republican machines; that both machines have controlled City Hall, and that the administration of either was not more free from corruption than that of the other, that the election of Mr. Dennison or of Mr. Webster would make the Court House merely an annex of City Hall; that Mr. Dennison is acknowledged friend of criminal classes while Mr. Webster never tried a criminal case in his life, that both are close personal friends of Mayor Fitzgerald and are equally susceptible to his influence.

Webster Among Favored.

"That Mayor Fitzgerald will, in all probability, be reelected; that if this happens the District Attorney should not be his personal friend, but should be a man with the ability, the courage to, able, tried and experienced attorney to every crooked political proposition gratified and baffled.

"That Mayor Fitzgerald became intimate with Mr. Webster early this year, that Mr. Webster became so great that on ... being ... presented Mr. Webster ... a ... for the blessing and subsequently as a solitaire poison and secured his ...

"That Mr. Webster attended the Dow ... of Collins Tillinghast on that Sunday ... and ... cheek about ... him and ... treated to his choicest brands.

"That Mr. Webster, Alderman Draper ... Councilman Harding of the Doyle case, ... the only Republican guests of the Mayor ... only Democratic office holders, took ... down the bay for pleasure a few ... ago on the city boat, that a banquet ... tendered Mr. Webster at a back Bay ... at which the Mayor was one of the ...

Friend of Fitzgerald.

"That the Mayor said, when he heard of Mr. Webster's nomination, 'Another friend of mine nominated.'

"That while this intimacy with the Mayor is not to be much criticised it proves a degree of intimacy with the Mayor and his cohorts reprehensible in a candidate for District Attorney; that Mr. Webster, while a member of the Legislature, got himself from a man connected with the ... ... for work ... in Europe as counsel, ... that he has no conception of ... people but takes money evidently believing that the doing of justice is a matter of dollars and cents.

"That no man charged with crime would hire him to defend his case; that no young lawyer would have him as senior counsel to try a criminal case; that those charged with the lawless acting criminal causes would handle him as a mere figurehead; that he is not competent subordinate, he could not and he could not trust that his nomination was a colossal blunder.

Poor Third in Contest.

"That he will be a poor third in the contest, that if the Republicans want the Mayor to run the Court House as well as City Hall they should not vote for Mr. Moran, but should allow Mr. Dennison to win.

"That Mr. Webster and Mr. Dennison boast of their party fealty; that Mr. Moran boasts of his loyalty, and asks for but to the whole people defiant of organizators and politicians.

"That Mr. Moran demonstrated this in publicly ... Mayor Fitzgerald for Mayor in ... ... Democratic Board in 1896 ... a ... ...

JOHN B. MORAN'S RECORD SHOWS ALL HIS PLEDGES FULFILLED

HAS FEARLESSLY DONE HIS SWORN DUTY TO THE PEOPLE

Rigid Prosecution of Grafters and Bribers Has Marked District Attorney's Work.

John B. Moran took office the first Monday in December, 1905.

He refused to appear, personally, before the Grand Jury because of the fact that the Grand Jury had by vote of its members, through the foreman, declined some of the [illegible] room, two or three months previously.

He boldly gave his reasons and informed the Grand Jury that it could have the assistance of Assistant District Attorney Dwyer and the indictment clerk, Mr. Doherty.

Complaint was made by Lawyer Miller, counsel for Lomasney, that a conspiracy had been formed by many leading politicians connected with the Fitzgerald campaign to assault and injure both Martin M. and Joseph F. Lomasney. Upon receipt of the letter Mr. Moran caused to be summoned to police headquarters all persons who had any [illegible] with the alleged conspiracy and made a thorough investigation of the evidence in support of [illegible] conspiracy and no indictments were found.

[illegible] Lomasney [illegible] Miller, [illegible] charges [illegible] Mr. Moran [illegible] [illegible] Lawrence. [illegible] the course of the investigation [illegible] [illegible] of one [illegible] [illegible] all the books of [illegible] attorney's office were looking for them with [illegible].

Passage of Bucket Shop Law Urged.

In January, 1906, Mr. Moran introduced a bill into the Legislature providing the district attorney and police commissioner of Boston with authority to examine any and all persons whom he believed had any connection with or knowledge of criminal operations [illegible] nature of the witnesses [illegible] the district attorney in the grand jury room made them [illegible] immunity from prosecution [illegible] law, as it is said as it still exists, allowed any of these persons to refuse to testify in the grand jury room on the ground that his testimony might incriminate him. The bill [illegible] the district attorney desired to eliminate by compelling the witness to testify and providing that [illegible] him immunity if he did testify. Mr. Moran's bill also required all physicians and nurses, when called on to treat a person apparently suffering from [illegible] death to notify the district attorney of the [illegible] to make a report to him from day to day as to the progress of the case, while under his care. The legislature at first refused to pass the bill on the ground that it was too drastic. [illegible] the middle of March it, [illegible] stricken out some of the [illegible] and passed it. [illegible] the closing [illegible] sitting of the Legislature Mr. Moran announced the passage of a [illegible] bucket shop law.

[illegible] that the then existing law was not adequate to enable the district attorney to institute proceedings under it. The Legislature, that year refused to pass a bucket shop law.

When the District Attorney entered of fice, the use of the [illegible] open for years [illegible] the screen law [illegible] Boston to furnish him officers to secure evidence. The Commissioners refused, although it had been claimed by some people Mr. Moran's predecessors with all the officers they asked for. Mr. Moran was supplied to the Suffolk police and the then [illegible] Mr. Moran [illegible] after the latter they dismissed Parker, refused to allow him the use of our State police.

Mr. Moran proceeded as well as he could without officers' assistance. Some of the hotels immediately made application for Law licenses and they paid into the city treasury the sum of $1,000 for such new licenses, which amount the city would never have received if it had not been for Mr. Moran's action. He instituted in Mr. Moran's name in the city courts [illegible] which the State has paid him in two years for his services, $2,000 a year. [illegible] Moran's salary at the end [illegible] first year's trial [illegible] to [illegible] during the District Attorney's office [illegible] altered by one of the police commissioners, [illegible] W. H. Gethro and Bribery Inquiry.

In January he asked the Legislature to allow him to secure the services of officers from the Police Department of Boston to perform such duty as he might designate [illegible] to them. The Legislature [illegible] passed a bill allowing the use of two officers, but the Governor [illegible] refused to allow him three. The reason given by Mr. Moran for declining [illegible] was that if, in the performance of his duties, he should see fit to secure a search warrant for a gambling house, or other place of evil resort, he could get [illegible] three officers, one to guard the front entrance, the other the rear, and the other to enter the place and secure the evidence in its wisdom, reminded that the only thing the District Attorney could do was to guard the front door and the other the rear door. How he could enter the residence inside, with one officer at the front door and another at the back, they never attempted to explain.

Mr. Moran, true to his promise to make [illegible] investigation of all published allegations of crime, summoned to the Grand Jury [illegible] witnesses against Frank J. Gethro, a member of the Legislature from Ward 9. The Grand Jury heard [illegible] Gethro consequently acted, found a bill [illegible] Gethro. There was [illegible] during the absence of the District Attorney from the room, [illegible] Gethro presented his decision and no indictment was ever returned in the case against Gethro.

During the sitting of the Grand Jury the District Attorney summoned the majority of the members of the House of Representatives to come before the Grand Jury to testify in relation to the [illegible] tions of bribery concerning the bucket shop bill. The Grand Jury returned no indictments, after hearing the evidence.

Meanwhile the Legislature, by a committee of two, had investigated the bucket shop matter and called before it all members of the House, including Mr. Gethro, and under the statute rendered every one of them [illegible] immunity.

O'CONNELL FAVORED AT ROME AS NEXT AMERICAN CARDINAL

Unusual Honors Already Bestowed on Young and Brilliant Churchman of Boston.

THE belief that Most Reverend William H. O'Connell, D.D., Metropolitan of the Catholic province of New England, will be the next American cardinal is strengthened by Rome dispatches quoting dignitaries high in the affairs of the Vatican.

Boston clergymen express no surprise at the news conveyed in messages from the "Eternal City." They say that in Rome the archbishop's elevation to cardinal was unmistakably settled when His Holiness Pope Pius X. said to the Boston prelate:

"I love the good people of Boston, for they are the most loyal in all most loyal America. Red (typifying the rank of cardinal) will be a more suitable color for you than purple (the episcopal color) when they are given over to your care, for it will better signify the purple blood of Boston's children."

This, according to a prominent Boston priest, was said after the Pope had praised Archbishop O'Connell's administration of Boston, for the excellent manner in which he had discharged the duties of his mission as papal envoy to the Mikado of Japan. This statement is reported to have been made in the presence

Talks on Teeth

By G. GORDON MARTIN, INCORPORATED.

The Toothless Person

Any person with one or two teeth left in either jaw had no alternative but plates before the Alveolar Method of supplying missing teeth without plates or ordinary bridgework was discovered and supplied by us.

They were literally between two fires—couldn't eat without teeth, couldn't eat with those "false teeth" they could buy.

The platewearer rolls his food about in his mouth and mashes it, but he can't grind it up.

With Alveolar teeth he can grind it up, exactly as he would if he had natural teeth.

No plates to destroy his speech, no ordinary bridgework to torture him and take his gums sore.

The Alveolar Method of supplying missing teeth bears the same relation to the old-fashioned "false teeth" of the electric light bears to the tallow dip as an illuminant. No comparison between the two.

The Alveolar Method has revolutionized the science of dentistry and brought health and happiness to thousands of people who have all this work done for them by us.

The method is one that calls for no pain or discomfort while the patient is in the chair.

Don't imagine you are going to be "operated upon," or that there is any cutting or boring into the gums—nothing of that kind is connected with it.

During the past four years we have treated nearly 10,000 cases, and we venture to say that we could get letters of recommendation from nearly every single case, if it were not for the fact that so many people object to having their names used in a testimonial. We can refer, however, to hundreds of people who would give us just a strong a testimonial as the following. Will you kindly read this letter?

DR. G. GORDON MARTIN

Dear Sir—I take pleasure in writing to inform you of my perfect satisfaction in the work you did for me. I should have written sooner, but thought best to wait a little longer before doing so, to see whether I liked you or the other dentist better. I am happy to say that my choice has been entirely satisfactory. I have had my teeth filled, and my mouth has been attended to generally, and the work has been done well and thoroughly.

I have envied my people for their fine teeth and well-shaped mouths, and now I have a parallel of which I am proud. The Miss Warren who has been so kind as to gather you could tell you of my case, as the other day she accompanied me to your office. My daughter hopes to come to Boston to finish her education, and possibly to come to you for some needed work on her own teeth, as she is as well pleased as I am.

Make whatever use you please of my letter, for I am ready to proclaim to all my appreciation of your work.

Sincerely yours,
NANCY L. CLOSE.

Bristol, R. I.

If you will call we shall be pleased to make a careful diagnosis of your case, free of any charge, and explain the method. If it is impossible for you to call at the present time, do the next best thing and send for our book, "Alveolar Dentistry," which explains the method in detail and is one of the most valuable treatises on the teeth ever compiled.

CAUTION—The success of this company, now the largest dentist concern in the world, has caused a large crop of fakirs to spring up on every side—some copy the word "Alveolar"—others make use of advertising—some, indeed, copy our advertisements word for word.

Look out for these imposters—they are dangerous.

No reputable dentist would adopt such methods.

Princeton Kickers Get a Big Surprise In Their Game at Ithaca.

CLEAN, SNAPPY CONTEST

Ithaca, N. Y., Oct. 26. It was a sadder and lonelier Tiger that dragged his badly twisted tail off Percy Field this afternoon as the close of the Princeton-Cornell game, the score of which was 6 to 5, in favor of the latter. Princeton was a 5 to 2 favorite, and no certain were the visitors before the game that they offered liberal odds that they would win.

The best half resulted in a brilliant scoring duel, with honors just about even. As the whistle end the first half, it was Princeton's ball on her own 15-yard line, two minutes in which came to either goal during the first half.

ALCOHOL TESTS NOT A SUCCESS

Gasolene Found to Do More Work in Motors by Government Officials.

Advices from Washington concerning results of the efforts to be made by the government at the Jamestown exposition as to the relative cost and efficiency of gasolene and alcohol, say that the results now at disposition point to the use of alcohol.

For a long time a federal revenue station on the east coast has been making experimental tests of the two fuels, the work being in charge of R. M. Strong and under the general supervision of Joseph A. Holmes, chief chemist of the bureau of the United States Geological Survey, and of H. W. Wiley, chief of the bureau of chemistry, roughly indicated when that it takes about a gallon and a half of alcohol to do the work of a gallon of gasolene.

It is said, as the result of experiments, that alcohol can be used in the present engines of the motor cars with no material change, and that the future will see many improved methods of using it and both processes and machinery developed that will put the price to the consumer down as far as the gasolene and the farmers be enabled to make their own fuel from the cheap products of their farms.

Manager Shanks of the Winton Co. Says Conditions Favor New Methods.

Charles B. Shanks, general sales manager of the Winton Motor Carriage Company, returned to Cleveland Monday after a seven week trip during which he visited the New York and Boston branches of the company.

"I have visited the Boston branch before in the same length of time and found that I knew better than before the trend of their opinion.

Based on hundreds of interviews, my judgment is that 1908 will be a bigger season under your than 1904 was a four-cylinder year. Facts came on the market, because the makers wanted a change in style, and that's why buyers were sick. Now what the bakers produced. That condition has changed. Today manufacturers are making what the people demand, and the big demand the demand of people who can afford to have both the best that offers for six-cylinders. Six-under without the weight of a six and with the power of a six, and with the flexibility of a six, is the demand of the people. Manufacturers are not going to make any more four-cylinder cars than they have to. Most of those who will are now building to make up an order. The tests will be extended to other Boston

BERLIET CAR BACK FROM LONG TRIP

New York, Oct. 26.—After touring through eleven different States and covering a distance of 5,000 miles, the American Locomotive Motor car Berliet has arrived in New York. The party started from the factory of the American Locomotive Automobile Company at Providence, R. I., and after visiting Boston came direct to New York.

After a brief stay in New York the car, with a party of five, among whom were F. M. Hollis, Arthur N. Jervis and H. A. Caswell, driver, left for a Western trip. The party met many things. Going over the Berkshires, which are known as the most difficult mountains to cross in the East, the car made the trip in 8 hours and 15 minutes. Another hard trip was from Pittsburg to Cleveland, over the Alleghany Mountains, the party started to Gettysburg and then to Frederick, Hagerstown and Cumberland, over the National Road to Philadelphia, by way of Lancaster Pike. The trip to New York from Philadelphia was made over Delaware, Trenton and Newark.

The Berliet car is manufactured in this country by the U. S. Motor Co. of Boston, who imported Mr. Hollis and his party. Mr. Hollis said that the roads encountered were fine and make roads that are good. He said that the general impression that the roads were bad was a mistake, and that the roads were good.

MOTORISTS AFTER ROAD OFFICIALS

"Take the loose stones out of your roads and erect suitable signposts on the crossroads you in Hudson," is the warning sent to the road supervisors, township committees and highway commissioners of Lenox town by the officers of the Wahconah Automobile Club. The committee of the club has been urging the various road authorities to do their work properly, but finding no success. Meanwhile the organization is receiving many complaints from autoists regarding the condition of the roads. Among the most common complaints is that the stones are loose and dangerous to motorists. Another thing that the club will do is to erect signposts at the crossroads, so that motorists will know which road to take.

FIRST RACE FOR STRIPPED CARS

America's first stripped stock touring car race is to be held over a course in Westchester County, New York, and the start will be but twenty five miles from New York. The forty mile course as selected is ideal. Tom Moore has the matter well in hand, with Chairman Robert Lee Morrell in charge of the course and Jos. Hooper, secretary of the American Motor Car Manufacturers Association, in charge of the timing. A referee has been secured, the course is ideal, protection on O. K., and the contest will be run April 11th at 1 o'clock. The track is an ideal one for a contest of this kind, being a mixture of gravel, macadam and dirt.

ORIENTS ARE WINNERS.

The Orients of Brighton defeated the Y. M. C. A. in Rogers Park yesterday afternoon by a score of 7 to 6. The features of the game were the work of Lynch, the pitching of Kinsella and the batting of Cooney, the 1st baseman of the Orients.

CONTENTMENT.

When a motorist keeps his car closed up contentment perches on his steering wheel.

TROUBLESOME SWITCHES.

It takes the average motorist a long time to discover that scratches, whether on the long or blade type, are not always the satisfactory contrivances their sunny boy seems to indicate. Both surfaces are prone to become foul with oil and dust, spraying wetness, making windshields hazy and smeary, and the "scratch" idea of wiping the condition of the average ignition surface and ordinary storage is, there are times when it becomes the best of a puzzling circumstance.

Rambler AUTOMOBILES

For the year 1908 the entire facilities of the Rambler factory will be devoted to the production of two Models, 34 and 31.

Model 34, a five-passenger touring car with four-cylinder vertical motor, 32 horse power, has selective type transmission with shaft drive. The wheel base is 112 in. wheels 36 in., with 4 in. tires. Price, fully equipped, $2,250. The same chassis, however, with appropriate changes in detail will be equipped with a roadster body with rumble seat, at the same price.

Model 31 is a five passenger touring car with detachable tonneau, equipped with the Rambler unit power plant, comprising double opposed motors, multiple disc clutch and planetary transmission entirely enclosed. Price, fully equipped $1,600. This model can be furnished with torpedo deck in lieu of the tonneau, at $1,300.

Both models have been brought to the highest possible degree of perfection in every detail that insures

Service, Economy and Comfort

A complete line of 1908 Ramblers will be shown at a private exhibit at the salesrooms of the Homan & Schulz Company, 38-40 West 62d Street, New York City, during both New York Automobile Shows. . . .

Ford 1908 Announcement

IN ADDITION to the four models shown at our booth at the New York Motor Show and at our Boston salesroom we will place on the market a LIGHT 4-CYLINDER TOURING CAR of not less than 20 H.P. capable of carrying five passengers—a 4-CYLINDER 20 H.P. LANDAULET, and a TAXIMETER CAB mounted on a similar chassis. We have not decided on the prices of these new models, so refrained from placing them on exhibition—But

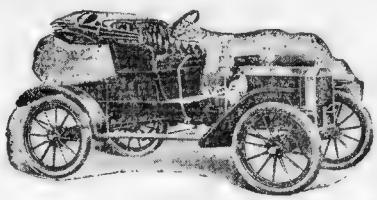
THE PRICES, LIKE THE CARS THEMSELVES, WILL BE A REVELATION

They will be ready for delivery in February and prices will then be announced

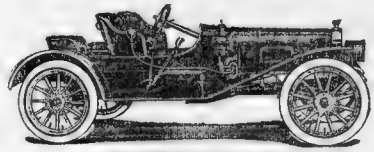
TO THE PUBLIC:—All we say is—WAIT.

Don't place your order for a LIGHT TOURING CAR—for a LANDAULET, the ideal town car—for a TAXIMETER CAB, until you have seen these new FORD models. In quality, in style, in everything that goes to make motoring a pleasure, Ford has anticipated practically every improvement that can possibly be made in the future.

These new models, as the four on exhibition, will be standard types, not only with Ford, but with other manufacturers who step with the march of progress. With the Ford "6" and the Ford Four Cylinder Runabout they stand clearly defined as a monument to the genius of America's master builder of automobiles.



MODEL "S," $700



6-CYLINDER ROADSTER, $2,800

FORD STANDARD MODELS ON EXHIBITION

at the Automobile Club of America Show, Grand Central Palace, include

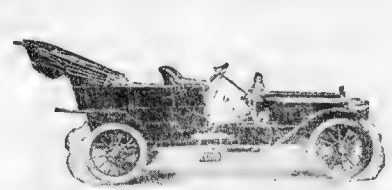
6 CYL. ROADSTER, $2,800.—A car with unusual speed, smart and rakish of appearance. Absolutely the peer of all cars of this type. It represents finality in the development of high powered runabouts. Improvements such as have suggested themselves during the past season have been added; these have been in the nature of minor detail.

6 CYL. TOURING CAR, $2,800.—2,100 "Sixes" in the hands of private owners in every State, in every clime—more than all other manufacturers combined have built—tells the tale. On every hand one sees frantic efforts of manufacturers to fall in line and meet the demand for sixes. They follow Ford, two years behind.

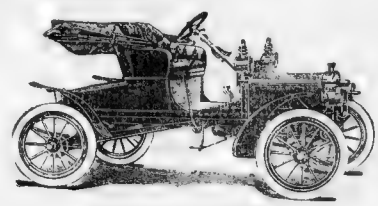
Ford has blazed the way; he is now the acknowledged leader in the industry. He is two years ahead of all his competitors in the building of six-cylinder cars.

4 CYL. RUNABOUT, MODEL "S," $700.—An edition de luxe of the famous Ford Model "N." Body is highly finished and seats luxuriously upholstered. Wide flaring fenders connected by running boards. Seats higher and set farther back from dash than earlier "N" Models. Equipment includes side and tail oil lamps, French tube horn and storage battery. The wheels are 28 inches, shod with 3-inch clincher tires.

4 CYL. RUNABOUT, MODEL "N," $600.—Famous the world over. Hasn't an equal in the world at less than $1,000 — PERFORMANCE, APPEARANCE, RELIABILITY, quality of workmanship and MATERIALS all considered. Its price has been made possible only by quantity production. It has no rival, no competition. If you want one—get your order in quickly—we know where we stand as to early deliveries.



6-CYLINDER TOURING CAR, $2,800



MODEL "N," $600

WE WANT MEN OF GOOD REPUTE IN THEIR HOME TOWNS—good, reliable hustlers—who will properly represent "Ford Courtesy" as well as Ford cars. We want men who will go into the automobile business in earnest, who will lay plans for the future—men who appreciate that the motor car is no longer a luxury but an everyday necessity to every buiness man who isn't rooted to one spot all day. We'll treat you right—copy that in your dealings with customers and you'll win. Fords sell themselves, and you'll easily place five Fords while trying to force one of the others on an unwilling customer.

Large capital is not necessary to obtain this agency—we don't tie you up with a big contract or a large deposit or insist on your disposing of a definite number of cars—we know you will sell as many as we'll give you, and we'll give you all you can sell promptly. Good reputation and good intentions, backed by hustle and cash to pay for cars as you order them, are the only requisites. The 1908 Ford line is the most complete, the most comprehensive and the best value ever offered by any maker in the history of the industry.

Write to-day for list of towns that are open in your State. Do it to-day—if you delay some more enterprising man or concern will have "sewed up" your territory.

Protection of His Children's Honor Defence of Guide for Killing Wife

"UNWRITTEN LAW" HIS PLEA FOR LIFE

Harvey Searles Faces Trial for Killing Wife Who Left Him Without Fear.

FEELS HE WILL GO FREE.

FARMINGTON, Me., Oct. 26.—To the jury which will try Harvey Searles, guide and woodsman, for the murder of his wife Phyllis, there is to be told the story of a domestic tragedy such as has never before been heard in Maine. Searles will be placed on trial on November 5. On the decision of twelve men of Franklin county will depend whether he will spend the rest of his life in Thomaston jail or go home to his two little children.

"Further South my client would be cleared by the 'unwritten law' without great effort," said Elmer E. Richards, counsel for Searles. When our Franklin county jury of hard-headed men hears the awful domestic story of Searles, learns how he suffered soul torture unspeakable, the loss of the society of his wife and his two little children, they will pause before they pass upon his fate.

"Jury Not Easily Swayed."

"Our Maine juries are not easily swayed sentimentally, but I am quite confident that after listening to Harvey Searles they will say to him, 'Go home to your children.'"

Searles is now in the jail here, having been brought back Wednesday after a five weeks' stay at Augusta, where he was under the observation of Dr. [illegible], superintendent of the Insane [illegible]. He is ready for his trial, ready to tell the facts as Jesse, who, he charges, was the cause of the whole tragedy, knows them to be. Jesse will be one of the chief witnesses against his brother.

To a Boston Sunday American reporter Searles made [illegible] statements. His first since he was arrested last [illegible].

"I will never see Mrs. Searles [illegible] since the day of the terrible tragedy which deprived me of my wife, Phyllis, whom I killed in defending my home and protecting her honor," said Searles in reply to the question, "Did you kill your wife?" When the jury hears the awful story of the despicable part played by Jesse Searles they will tell me to go home to my children. I did not kill my wife. I killed that no-good hobo, Jesse, who ruined my wife and little Emma and [illegible] children."

Brother Held in Same Jail.

In the [illegible] Searles was the guest [illegible] confined [illegible] as a witness against his brother. At present [illegible] Augusta [illegible] awaiting the action of the grand jury [illegible] enduring hardships [illegible] his brother's [illegible] tightening [illegible] eyes soon [illegible].

When he [illegible] turned the [illegible] and [illegible] Allen he [illegible] and [illegible] ple did the [illegible] Immediately [illegible] prisoner at [illegible] to see him [illegible] talk with [illegible].

The defense [illegible] Searles' story, [illegible] testimony of all New England will never before [illegible] brought [illegible] Former employers of Searles [illegible] his exceptional character [illegible] for them.

Story of the Tragedy.

The jury will be led through the [illegible] Sunday afternoon by the [illegible] broken husband called at the home of his wife, where [illegible] two [illegible] and found his brother-in-law [illegible] Kuma, and how his wife told him to go away, refusing to allow him to [illegible] eighteen-months-old baby. She [illegible]

They will be told how Searles left his brother Jesse riding that afternoon with Phyllis, who had [illegible] in her arms. They will be told how Jesse, leaving the carriage, was recalled by Phyllis and returning saw Harvey with the boy Sherwood in his arms for the first time since he had been stolen. Also how Jesse, and then will [illegible] of the act which was the climax of the tragedy.

They will follow the father, with the two Sherwood children, as they [illegible] home of his grandfather, where he placed them on the desert [illegible] and then [illegible] three miles [illegible] run down the road to his cousin's home he tried to send his own letter and begged for another bullet to [illegible] finish it.

Mystery in Lad's Death.

A most singular part of the tragedy is the death, yet unaccounted for, of Roy Hutchins, an eleven-year-old schoolboy, who was with Searles at the time of the tragedy on the road. His dead body was found when officers were searching for him to summon him to court to testify against Searles.

The parents of the boy still insist that he was slain and did not commit suicide, his body being found in a hollow stream with his hands tied to a tree above in the form of a noose. No explanation has ever been explained to the satisfaction of the parents.

FINANCIERS UNITE AND PANIC THAT THREATENED RUIN TO BANKS ENDS

Clearing House Association Votes to Issue Certificates and Relieve Stringency.

MILLIONS FROM EUROPE

Leading Bankers of New York Declare Last Vestige of Alarm Will Vanish by Monday.

RUNS ON BANKS CEASE

Calm Succeeds Storm; Stocks Hold Firm After Week of Tremedous Losses.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—With the unanimous decision of the New York Clearing House Association to-day to issue clearing house certificates for the settlement of debit balances by the banks, leading financiers believe that the final steps have been taken to restore conditions in financial circles to their wonted calm.

The issue of these certificates will release for general circulation a large sum of currency, and the scarcity of money is now the only cloud that lingers on the horizon.

Of scarcely less importance as tending to restore confidence was the action of the Clearing House Association providing for the re-admission of the trust companies to membership in the Association. This will place the trust companies under the restrictive rules of the Clearing House and tend to prevent a recurrence of the situation which brought about the panic of last week.

J. Pierpont Morgan to-night issued the following statement: "As I have already said I cannot too strongly emphasize the importance of people realizing that the greatest injury that can be done to the present situation is thoughtless withdrawal of funds from banks and trust companies, and then hoarding the cash in safe deposit vaults or elsewhere, thus withdrawing the supply of capital always needed in such emergencies as that with which we have been confronted during the past week."

Mr. Morgan added, as did also Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou, who left to-night for Washington, that he believed the situation was well in hand now, and that no more trouble would be experienced.

Millions of Gold from Europe.

Announcement of the early arrival of gold imports from Europe further improved the situation to-day. There is a balance of $10,000,000 in our favor in the trading between Europe at this time, and this will serve to hasten the return to normal conditions in the financial world.

Heidseck, Schellenberg & Company of No. 47 William street announced yesterday that the first of the gold imports, $1,000,000 in amount, will arrive here on Wednesday.

With all these agencies operating to restore confidence the reaction which set in on Friday was continued unabated yesterday and the sun began to shine in Wall Street again. Except for the suspension of the Vermilye Bank in Brooklyn, a small Jewish institution whose closing had no effect on the situation, every report that went out over the ticker was favorable.

Stock Market Continues Firm.

The stock market continued firm and money was comparatively easy. The Trust Company of America, the Lincoln Trust and the other institutions which were imperiled by runs rode the storm and their officials announced at the close of the day that they expected would resume business Monday. Capital showed more confidence. How I been shown when the announcement that Postmaster-General Cortelyou would come to New York to help relieve the situation. J. Pierpont Morgan and bankers in Europe, in conference with them, opposed the issue of clearing house certificates and gave way to the policy when the matter had been thoroughly threshed out.

A committee headed by Vice-President Cannon of the Fourth National Bank was appointed to arrange the details for the issue. Banks will be required to draft themselves of the certificates for amount of notes to their credit on the 26th of August

FINANCIAL UNREST DUE TO POLITICS

—SIR WILFRED LAURIER

Premier Fears No Ill Effect Canada From Condition in United States.

Cornish, N. H., Oct. 26.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, premier minister of Canada, does not fear that the financial unrest which has been disturbing New York will affect any Canadian cities that was a topic of what he said in a chat on Sunday with a reporter today at High Court, where he and Lady Laurier are visiting Joseph H. Willard, former United States minister to Virginia.

The financial condition, on the other hand, I believe to be of a purely local nature," Sir Wilfrid said. "But I don't want to say anything about it, save that I don't believe that any unrest has reached Canada as yet, and I don't believe that it will be felt there.

"I am here simply on a visit for a few days," continued the premier. "I am going to-morrow to visit with my friend Mr. Willard, former lieutenant governor of Virginia. Lady Laurier and myself are much taxed up with this beautiful country. We think it is one of the prettiest spots we have ever seen.

Sir Wilfrid and Lady Laurier arrived at 2:30 this afternoon at White River Junction, Vt., from which point they are coming on a special car on the Canadian Pacific. They were met by Mr. Willard and driven to High Court. They enjoyed an auto trip during the afternoon, and at 7 o'clock partook of the evening meal. It is generally understood that Sir Wilfrid will remain about fifteen days as the guest of Mr. Willard. They were tonight at the New York state line.

Sir Wilfrid has declined to be interviewed by newspapermen in Boston, and it would be useless to attempt to see him if he talked more than he has here, the world will be the wiser. It is said, and in fact he himself has said, that he is not in possession of any definite information of Canadian affairs.

Charcoal Kills Bad Breath

Bad Odor of Indigestion, Smoking, Drinking or Eating Can Be Instantly Stopped.

Sample Package Mailed Free.

Other people notice your bad breath where you would not notice it at all. It is nauseating to other people to stand before them and while you are talking give them a whiff or two of your bad breath. It usually comes from food fermenting on your stomach. Sometimes you have it in the morning—that awful sour, bilious, bad breath. You can stop that at once by swallowing one or two Stuart Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful gas and odor absorbers ever prepared.

Sometimes your meals will reveal themselves in your breath to those who talk with you. "You've had onions, sir" or "You've been eating cabbage," and all of a sudden you belch in the face of your friend. Charcoal is a wonderful absorber of odors, as every one knows. That is why Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are so quick to stop all gases and odors of odorous foods or gas from indigestion.

Don't use breath perfumes. They never conceal the odor, and never absorb the gas that causes the odor. Besides, the very fact of using them reveals the reason for their use. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges in the first place stop for good all sour breath and belching of gas, and make your breath pure, fresh and sweet, just after you've eaten. Then no one will turn his face away from your when you breath or talk; your breath will be pure and fresh, and besides your food will taste much better to you at your next meal. Just try it.

Charcoal does other wonderful things, too. It carries away from your stomach and intestines all the impurities there massed together and which cause biliousness. Charcoal is a purifier as well as an absorber.

Charcoal is now by far the best, most cleansing purifier known. A whole boxful will do no harm. In fact, the more you take the better. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal and mixed with just a faint flavor of honey to make them palatable for you, but not too sweet. You just chew them like candy. They are absolutely harmless.

Get a box, today, sweet breath, freshen your stomach for your next meal and keep the intestines in good working order. Then you have got the secret of good health and long life.

You can get all the charcoal necessary to do these wonderful but simple things by getting Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. We want you to test these little wonder workers yourself before you buy them. So send us your full name and address for a free sample of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. Then after you have tried the sample, and been convinced, go to your druggist and get a 25c. box of them. You'll feel better all over, more comfortable, and "cleaner" inside.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

SKYSCRAPERS ARE GOOD INVESTMENT

Boston Has Many Buildings That Offer Great Advantages to Tenants.

BUSINESS CENTRALIZATION

Boston's skyscrapers have proved both a good investment and a help to the growing business interests of the city.

The great office buildings in Boston line the Board of Trade building on State street, the Oliver, corner of Milk and Oliver streets, the Old South on Washington opposite School street, as well as the Shawmut National Bank Building, are about as complete of their kind as money and skill will allow. The John Hancock building is a little world of its own. Here money has been expended to make a modern office building with its varied equipments appeal to the demands of the most exacting critic of what an office building should be.

Pays 4½ Per Cent.

Probably the Board of Trade building as a trust, paying four and one-half per cent. dividend, stands at the head as an investment in realty. It has no mortgage, nothing but the capital stock of $1,000,000. It is a building which on State street rents on cheap land that has been an advantage from the beginning of its existence. Any office building paying four per cent. on its investments is considered a success, but when it is less than three and one-half per cent. it is considered not a success. There are a few buildings of this kind in this city that do not pay more than two and one half per cent. Take the Old South building, the Tremont building, Barristers' Hall and Kimball building.

The Tremont is a Trust which in the building at the corner of School and Washington streets, has capital stock of $600,000 and pays a dividend of four per cent. The old building is owned at Providence, the is a very good showing.

Location Very Important.

To make a building of this type successful the location has much to do with its prosperity as an investment. Many build here are poorly located and cannot get the patronage of the business world that they are entitled to. Tasks and interests with pay of first class property and cannot investigate the character of the building.

Trustees of estates find investments in office buildings a very rare service and though they pay but four per cent. they are glad to get that in investments which their executors' enterprises.

The Sharon on Tremont Building are owned by many persons of average means who have a desire to have a small interest in the investments and there is no more opportunity in investing the trustees of money than with these buildings. Trustees afford a very safe investment. Boston though it has a reputation for the height of its buildings, has not made as much progress in this direction as in other cities, as can be generally understood. The practical side of all buildings has engrossed its view for the last twenty years. With the use of elevators and light, the problem of a great office building is not so much one of height as it is of room to expand and make a convenient building in all kinds of ways.

Superfluity of Offices.

There is a superfluity of good offices in Boston. The supply is greater than the demand. Consequently the best equipped buildings come to the front and get a slight advance in rent, though it is not always the case. Location is a factor equal as far as modern conveniences are concerned.

It is better today to do business in a well equipped modern office building than to seek quarters where rent is cheaper, but where it is not convenient. Many a small concern has failed simply because it was not in a better building. In such buildings and could use his energies in other ways than by merely heating

Food Poisons.

90 Per Cent of All Diseases the Result of Undigested Putrefying Foods.

Men of affairs, women of society and children with active brains are too often sedentary in their habits, giving little time to exercise. To this evil is added that of high and irregular living—as a result, the stomach cannot stand the demands made upon it. The abused and overtaxed stomach does not properly do the work of digestion, food taken in ferments and the poison permeates the whole system. The body loses in weight and becomes a prey for the attack of whatever disease it may encounter.

Did it ever occur to you how busy that stomach of yours is? It only holds three pints, but in one year you force it to take in 2 400 pounds of material, diluted. It must prepare it for assimilation into the blood. No wonder it rebels when overworked. We crowd it with steaks and pastry, irritate its juices with spices and acids, and expect the stomach to do its work. It can't.

All over the inner layer of the stomach are glands which secrete the juices necessary to digestion. The entrance of food into the stomach is the signal for these glands to do their work. The more the food, and the more indigestible, the greater the demand upon them and upon the muscles of the wall adjoining.

Think of the tons of high-seasoned game, sweetmeats and appetizers crammed into this little four-ounce mill, and then wonder if you will why you are dizzy or nauseated or constipated. Don't blame your stomach or curse your fate that you should be so unfortunate. Blame yourself and apply the remedy.

First, get a small package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, taking one after each meal and at bed time. They are not a medicine, but a digestant. The stomach is worn out and needs help, not medicine. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will do the work for it when it fails to do. There's enough power in one grain of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets to digest 3,000 grains of any kind of food, so you needn't fear that anything you eat will remain in your stomach undigested.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will rout the poison because they remove the cause—food fermentation. They are nature's own cure for dyspepsia. The host of troubles dyspepsia is father of, cannot be numbered, for a healthy stomach is the source of all health.

Seize your opportunity before worse conditions confront you. Send today for a free trial package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. They will bring your stomach relief. F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

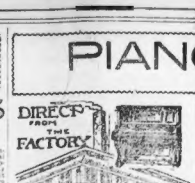
PIANOS AND ORGANS.

Set solid, 12½c. per line; displayed, 20c. per line.



Do You Want a PIANO?

Yes, of course I do, but cannot afford it in the present state of affairs.

Now if we will show you a plan whereby you, in a very small effort, may secure a piano, would you be interested?

Certainly we would be interested, but we cannot afford to pay cash.

Exactly so. That is the reason we have a plan to suit your circumstances.

Then we will call on account of sickness.

PIERCE STORAGE SALESROOMS
PIANOS ARE SACRIFICED

Why the Piano Trust Hates The Roxbury Storage Salesrooms

Because we won't allow them to dictate the selling price on their pianos when they come into our possession and we sacrifice them on the floors of our salesrooms.—Their hate would turn to love if we would enter into an agreement to keep up the high prices on their instruments. We are going to stay out of all the Piano Trust's schemes to keep up high prices. We'll take our chances with the public and continue to keep the prices down—away down—read every part of this announcement—and believe it—Because it is all true.

$5 Down—$1 a Week

The gilded piano stores, with their costly appointments, their high-salaried sales agents, their sellers' commissions, etc., are no place for the economical piano buyer to go. Take the trouble to look around a little, go up where the rents are not so high and buy your piano right.

canals that are much narrower, perhaps too narrow to be seen in themselves, but, combining canals and bordering vegetation, becoming very distinct in the season when vegetable growth is most luxuriant."

Mars Thought a Desert.

"What is your abstract theory regarding Mars, its surface and condition, enlightened by the result of your late work in Chile, stated in words that can be understood by the ordinary reader?" I asked.

"Mars is a planet 4,000 miles less in bread as our moon, going around the sun about once in two of four years in a path, or orbit, that is just outside the one traversed by our earth in its journeys around the sun. Sometimes Mars is comparatively near us, sometimes at that of its year it is on the side of the sun opposite us. When Mars is on this side of the sun and near to us we observe and learn things, the best of instruments are required and the most advantageous positions for observation are chosen.

"I chose South America this time at a point several thousand feet in altitude, where there had been no rain for over twenty years, and therefore no clouds to mention. where Mars, looking larger and more luminous than from any other earthly point, rose over us lighting bright and interesting.

"Very ago, with less perfect equipment, they thought Mars had seas, mountains, rivers, lakes and other topographical features possessed by this earth. Later it was thought to be a dead planet, a desert without habitation. This latter theory has been advanced and opposed by astronomers for years.

Lowell Discovers Canals.

"Professor Lowell and other eminent men found canals and polar snow caps and dark patches—yes, and light patches—upon the surface, and they strengthened the theory of a race of beings of a high order living upon the little planet.

"Then came those opposing this theory. Who believed that the canals, even if they were straight, were fissures in Mars' deserted surface, caused by upheaval through natures working forces, which are meagre, that the waters had, perhaps, seeped down through these fissures and dissipated.

"Then we saw that some of the canals were double, but those who opposed the asserted that what we saw were the results of optical illusions caused by imperfect lenses and the vibrations of our atmosphere as the impressions were received through the telescope.

"Meanwhile it was agreed that at least two-thirds of the surface of Mars was an arid plain without mountains or seas, height with snow caps at each pole which increased in size or receded according to the season, just as occurs on this planet, on Mars showing darker might be something less than arid semi-desert, even though what these might be they did not know.

"It was also agreed without dispute that the lines, patches and colors were in an interminable network all over the planet, being especially noticeable on one side, and that they seemed to be connected by these markings that we call canals.'

Canal 2,500 Miles Long.

"The junctions of these canals were marked by dots that seemed round in shape and, in the main, fitted in to the breadth of the canals. One of the canals we found was measured was nearly 2,500 miles long. Many were largely and plainly defined. Thousands of little were discerned, but these we naturally regarded as being shorter and minor canals.

"The great point was to establish or disestablish the existence of the double and parallel canals. Nature never makes perfectly parallel lines. We established that the double canals exist, and that they are mathematically parallel. Many are long and plainly marked. Better still, they

Facts of Interest About Planet Mars

A DAY on Mars is about forty minutes longer than our day.

Its seasons are almost like our seasons, only nearly double in length, since the Martian year is nearly twice the length of ours.

There are no mountains on Mars and no great elevations or depressions.

Seasonable colorings indicate vegetation on Mars.

In Winter the temperate zones are sometimes covered with a white substance, believed to be frost, or maybe snow.

A Spring haze surrounds the polar caps in Spring, when the snow melts.

Two-thirds of the surface of Mars is desert land, supplied by big and small canals, single and double, and spoked by tiny ones at the junctions of the canals, all showing intelligent arrangement.

The canals are from three to seventy miles wide.

The double canals are from 200 to 600 miles apart and strictly parallel. All are laid out with remarkable and mathematical precision. The longest is nearly 2,500 miles in length.

appear double in dozens of our photographs.

"Only intelligent beings could lay them out. Therefore, intelligent beings exist on Mars. It is a case of high intellect pushed to dire necessity to do the best to live against the decaying conditions of the planet.

"Mars is small, with thin atmosphere and with but little water, what little there exists mostly concealed and hard to go round. It freezes at the poles in the Martian Winter, in Spring melting ice flows to the low lands adjacent to the snow caps and, through the canals, is conducted to the multitude of small habitable spots. The double canals are visible when the vegetation blooms in the Martian Summer. It shows green, often yellowish green, afterward turning to copper color, then fading in Autumn and Winter.

Proves Mars Is Inhabited.

"Mind you, in thus theorizing, I am going beyond the known facts. I am not talking as a scientist now—merely as a layman carrying the theory of life on Mars to the ultimate in what seems to be the coming scientific theory.

"If you ask me as an astronomer what these canals are called what or just what they are, I could reply that I do not know. I can only think and guess, and, maybe, my guess would be just as good as mine. As an inquirer after facts, I have the right and advantage to put the fullness of the theory just set forth. It is of benefit in a popular way as a layman would reason it out. Please do not confuse the known facts, which are meagre, with theory in its application. I go only so far as to say that I have proved that Mars has double canals which could only be the work of intelligent beings living there, and, state, therefore, that I have no doubt that Mars is inhabited.

"There is with this a double smile, that everyone finds so contagious and encouraging," Professor Todd added.

"There is a chance for you or any of your readers to develop the theory, whether it found a little later to fit the facts, will make a good deal of difference in the ages for the successful theorizer. It is hardly in our line to theorize, we can only record facts as we acquire them. Professor Lowell's book on Mars and its Canals will give to any investigator ample basis for theorizing.

Mars Nearly All Desert.

Professor Todd then went on to expaun how life adapts itself wherever there is a possibility of existence, as, for instance, the deep sea fish that never see the surface, the early reptiles when the earth was hot, and the animal life that continues to the greatest cold.

"Why should a people not be able to gradually meet the change that has come over Mars?" he declared. "Once upon a time the planet was quite moist, and now it is now probably cold, except for the sun's rays. The surface of it is like our own, but the water has mostly disappeared. Mars is a vast Sahara desert. Most of it is nearly all desert. The few places, which at once gave back water, can now get barely enough to continue the animal and vegetable life there. There seems to be a large lowland patch—a continent—just under the pole on one side. When the polar ice melts water flows to it in comparative abundance—again you see I am theorizing as a layman—the overabundance of water at this time and place is conducted through canals to the smaller patches of lowlands about the surface of the panels.

"Some perhaps would say that the canals were navigable, bordered with villages and vegetation; that the junctions of the canals represented by dark round specks are little lakes or reservoirs; that the big canals are main arteries, and the innumerable little ones the branches, and that all the interior is a dusty and desert that will not support life.

"It may also be argued that water comes from the North Pole half the year and from the South Pole the other half; that the waters even meet at the equator of Mars, you will remember, is not flattened at the poles as much as our earth is being so much smaller."

WIFE OF MARS EXPLORER DESCRIBES THE WORK FOR AMERICAN READERS

Mrs. Mabel Loomis Todd, who was one of the most interested and hard-working assistants that Professor David Todd of Amherst had during his recent expedition to Chile, South America, has described the actual work of taking photographs of Mars for the readers of the Sunday American and has also drawn the pictures which are herewith reproduced.

In the great South American desert, on the top of the Andes, during the recent Summer months, which were Winter months there, Mrs. Todd spent much of her time at the great Amherst telescope studying the ever-changing views of the planet, and, from time to time, during the sketching the canals and the sunken continents at the poles, where the water from the ice caps which are melted in Summer are drawn off through these great artificial courses to irrigate the deserts and to prolong the threatened existence of the inhabitants of that little planet.

By Mrs. Mabel Loomis Todd.

"In my drawings of the planet Mars for the Boston Sunday American I have indicated only a few of the largest single canals and double canals, though the entire surface is meshed and cobwebbed, as it were, with smaller canals and dotted with small oases at their junctions. The polar caps are of snow and ice. The dark surfaces are probably vegetable life and habitable lowlands. The white areas, constituting about two-thirds of the planet, represent arid ochre-colored deserts.

"The images upon the receiving plate, magnified and condensed from the almighty lenses of the telescope, were only one-eighth of an inch in actual diameter. One-eighth of an inch, therefore, represents the diameter of each of the 7,000 negatives made and, two weeks ago, sent to Professor Lowell for printing.

"The plates were exposed from half a minute to two minutes each, but the arrangement was such that, when one exposure was secured, a quick shift of the plate brought another part of the sensitive surface into range.

"These negatives were transported in hand by members of the expedition, who left South America two weeks before Professor Todd, his family and others, were examined to attend personally to the transportation of the telescope and our several tons of baggage.

"The negatives, by reason of their smallness, can only be printed by the employment of astronomical mechanism. In the meantime, my drawings are of some value as they plainly reveal the surface of Mars with its double canals and other features.

CANALS ON MARS PROVE HUMAN LIFE

Are a Wonderful Example of Engineering and Skill, Says Prof. Todd.

"As I sat at the telescope and watched the face of the planet constantly changing in appearance, I was able to see the parallel and single canals quite plainly, and at the same time I was able to make drawings of them which are accurate and satisfactory.

"During our observations Mars approached to within 38,500,000 miles of the earth, and our Amherst telescope, with its object glass of eighteen inches, brought the surface of the planet to within practically 40,000 miles of us. Mars, at this time, appeared almost in the zenith, a condition that cannot be had in the northern hemisphere, and I was able to work with its still air and freedom from moisture, among the best possible atmospheric conditions for astronomical observation.

Photographs Furnish Proof.

"A trained eye can distinguish a wealth of detail upon the planet Mars, whereas to the ordinary observer only a brilliant disc is presented. The trained observer will soon notice the white spots that are the polar caps, the dark areas that will be able to see the lines and patches and actually be able to make a study of the surface features.

"In spells of exceptionally steady air these markings were most clear, though even in the best conditions of favorable, the best impressions of the planet's surface come in occasional flashes. These were readily caught by the eye and, occasionally, reproduced by the camera.

"Occasionally, I caught a glimpse of an almost perfect map of the beaming face of Mars showing with wonderful clearness even the finer line, or canals, and the oases, or fertile spots, produced by the tremendous scheme of artificial irrigation.

"These instant confirmations of the accumulated knowledge of years could not fail to make a deep impression upon the observer and stimulate thought beyond the possibilities offered in colder consideration.

"The crowning achievement of the expedition was the actual establishment by photographic process, for the very first time, of the existence upon Mars of double or parallel canals, planned by the Italian astronomer Schiaparelli, in 1882, and later reasserted by Professor Lowell. Photographic plates do not lie, and the double markings of many canals, and even the traces of the smaller and more insignificant, are plainly discernible.

Vegetation Is Visible.

"The conspicuous polar caps become smaller as Summer advances on Mars and larger during the Martian Winter. As the snow melts, the polar caps show a black border. Then the canals become visible, and, following them, the oases take place. Irrigating canals abound upon the surface of the land, and vegetation is found in the damp depressions which show as dark patches and also along the canals. All else is desert, ochre-colored waste.

"Mars is much farther along the road to geologic death than our earth, perhaps larger during the Martian Winter. As the snow melts, the polar caps show a black border. Then the canals become visible, and, following them, the oases take place. Irrigating canals abound upon the surface of the land, and vegetation is found in the damp depressions which show as dark patches and also along the canals. All else is desert, ochre-colored waste.

"Mars is much farther along the road to geologic death than our earth, perhaps larger during the Martian Winter, because of being smaller in size. Possibly Mars is a little older than our earth.

"To what lengths the intelligence of the inhabitants of Mars will go in their struggle for existence against such awful odds is a subject for endless conjecture. Human nature follows necessity. The canal system very likely a result from the gradual loss of the surface water.

"Who knows where the battle will end? When all the water is gone, will the inhabitants of Mars still be on the live, changed in appearance, appetites and life requirements as to be able to adapt themselves to these seeming impossibilities? Is the history of our earth forecasted in the history of Mars?"

FINANCIERS UNITE, BANK PANIC ENDS

funds to pay off employes should have the first call to-day.

General approval was given to the action of the president of the savings bank in all of which to-day put into effect the rule which compels the filing of sixty days' notice of an intention to withdraw funds.

Clearing house certificates were used to-day in the settlement of debit balances by the banks. This is the first time they have been used since the disturbance of 1896.

It is the sixth time they have been used. The clearing house certificates were first used in 1875. They have been issued in 1884, 1890, 1893, 1895 and 1896.

Considerable opposition to their use was encountered at the meeting conference that led up to the final meeting today, the vote to adopt them being unanimous however.

Announcement was also made that several trust companies had applied for membership in the clearing house. A resolution was introduced providing for revision of the constitution of the clearing house rates so as to admit them, and it will be considered at the next meeting of the association.

The clearing house committee was in session continuously throughout the day, the members passing in and out as business called them to their banks from time to time.

A member of the clearing house committee expressed the opinion that other cities would be compelled to use certificates also. He said that the volume issued would depend entirely upon the extent to which people withdrew deposits, but expressed the opinion that the total ought not to run above $100,000,000.

Completed financial calls returned to Brooklyn to-day. Only one suspension was announced across the bridge—that of the Terminal Bank, one of the Jenkins institutions, whose closing was expected since its depositor was the Williamsburg Trust Company, which temporarily suspended on Friday.

For the rest, the situation was most satisfactory. Downtown there was complete absence of any excitement. The King's County Trust Company settled with about 150 depositors, mostly women, who withdrew small amounts, and at the end of the day it was announced that with more than a million dollars on hand to meet demands, only about $100,000 was paid out. The conference resumed open until 1 o'clock to accommodate all the depositors who were waiting to draw money.

CAMBRIDGE CHURCH TO BURN MORTGAGE

Three Days' Celebration Is Planned for Observance of Fiftieth Anniversary.

With the burning of the church mortgage, addresses by the present and former pastors, Sunday school superintendents and Mayor Walter C. Wardwell of Cambridge, and with special historical and musical exercises, the North Avenue Congregational Church of North Cambridge will observe its fiftieth anniversary, starting to-day.

The program for the celebration of the semi-centennial follows:

To-day, 10:30 o'clock: Organ voluntary, sentences, doxology, invocation and Lord's prayer, responsive reading, gloria; anthem, "Festival Te Deum," D. Buck; scripture lesson; anthem, "Sing Alleluia Forth," D. Buck; prayer; response, "Praise the Lord, Ye Children," Brown; notices; hymn No. 1220, "O God Our Help in Ages Past"; solo to make drawings of them which are accurate and satisfactory.

"During our observations Mars approached to within 38,500,000 miles of the earth, and our Amherst telescope, with its object glass of eighteen inches, brought the surface of the planet to within practically 40,000 miles of us. Mars, at this time, appeared almost in the zenith, a condition that cannot be had in the northern hemisphere, and I was able to work with its still air and freedom from moisture, among the best possible atmospheric conditions for astronomical observation.

Photographs Furnish Proof.

"A trained eye can distinguish a wealth of detail upon the planet Mars, whereas to the ordinary observer only a brilliant disc is presented. The trained observer will soon notice the white spots that are the polar caps, the dark areas that will be able to see the lines and patches and actually be able to make a study of the surface features.

"In spells of exceptionally steady air these markings were most clear, though even in the best conditions of favorable, the best impressions of the planet's surface come in occasional flashes. These were readily caught by the eye and, occasionally, reproduced by the camera.

"Occasionally, I caught a glimpse of an almost perfect map of the beaming face of Mars showing with wonderful clearness even the finer line, or canals, and the oases, or fertile spots, produced by the tremendous scheme of artificial irrigation.

"These instant confirmations of the accumulated knowledge of years could not fail to make a deep impression upon the observer and stimulate thought beyond the possibilities offered in colder consideration.

"The crowning achievement of the expedition was the actual establishment by photographic process, for the very first time, of the existence upon Mars of double or parallel canals, planned by the Italian astronomer Schiaparelli, in 1882, and later reasserted by Professor Lowell. Photographic plates do not lie, and the double markings of many canals, and even the traces of the smaller and more insignificant, are plainly discernible.

Vegetation Is Visible.

"The conspicuous polar caps become smaller as Summer advances on Mars and larger during the Martian Winter. As the snow melts, the polar caps show a black border. Then the canals become visible, and, following them, the oases take place. Irrigating canals abound upon the surface of the land, and vegetation is found in the damp depressions which show as dark patches and also along the canals. All else is desert, ochre-colored waste.

"Mars is much farther along the road to geologic death than our earth, perhaps larger during the Martian Winter, because of being smaller in size. Possibly Mars is a little older than our earth.

"To what lengths the intelligence of the inhabitants of Mars will go in their struggle for existence against such awful odds is a subject for endless conjecture. Human nature follows necessity. The canal system very likely a result from the gradual loss of the surface water.

"Who knows where the battle will end? When all the water is gone, will the inhabitants of Mars still be on the live, changed in appearance, appetites and life requirements as to be able to adapt themselves to these seeming impossibilities? Is the history of our earth forecasted in the history of Mars?"
